The mistress has to flatter the maid these days

In the days when adventure ballads were still being sung in the kitchen domestic servants were a common thing. Today of ten million working women only about 400,000 are in domestic service, that is to say about 4 per cent.

In 1882 almost half the number of working women were in household employment. Nowadays at the labour exchange in a big city people applying for domestic service can reckon on a choice of around 200 posts.

Those wishing to employ a maid must be prepared to open their purses and their minds. Imagination is necessary when wording advertisements. For example: "We are a modern, happy family and are looking for domestic help from some one who is just as cheerful as us. Age immaterial. Household equipment and other labour saving devices are on hand. We have a large garden, will put our car at your disposal, offer you a comfortable room with bath, regular working hours and wages well above the recommended level. If you should so wish you will be accepted as a member of the family."

Despite fawning attitudes most prospective domestic servants smile, wryly fold up their newspaper and go and clock in at the factory.

This is despite the fact that no other profession offers an unskilled worker the possibility to earn more than 800 Marks per month.

The decline of this profession corresponds to the rise in status of the people who used to fill the posts from the lowest

. aber soll eine Koalition noch teistmi, die Hauptsache our noch durch die Angu-mengehalten wird, die Wahler könnten uch übelnehmen?

uch übelochmen? spetiellen Fall von Kambodscha hat die ung solaage öffentlich darüber dukutert, esthehen solle. daß jede Ahtun jettt mer seschudaren Nouzen bringen kann. Auch zu den Sozzaldemokrasen vorgeschlagene g in nicht der Wenhait letzter Schluß, der Botzehaftere in Kambodscha abberofen die überigen Grechfite aber normal abzele werden, stuft sich die Bundesrepublik zur Repräsentation herunter, während die durch eine Botschafter in Kambodscha ten ist. Bisber war die Situation genau ehrt. Da meß man sich wirklich fragen, je Bundenrepublik eigenflich bestrafen will Kambodschaner oder sich telber. Und alsgibt ochließlich auch bei wielen Politikere nich, daß die abschreckende Wirkung tines mit Kambodschaner zeit anhalten wird. Regierung der Großen Koalition vermag

DIESE

WOCHE

Linderspiegel 10 - 11
Palitische Weeke 12
Feuilleten 11 - 18
Literatur 19 - 20
Palitischen Buch 21 - 21
Kristik und Infermation 34

position on the social scale to a status symbol which is becoming more and more important. There are vacancies today for 3 million domestic servants in the

The severity of this need is, of course, reduced by the great number of house-hold gadgets on the market which are within the budget of even the most modest household in this country.

Nevertheless there must be someone in a large household to operate these labour saving devices and plan and manage the cleaning and tidying of the house and its furnishings.

At first it was thought that the lack of domestic servants could be solved by what is described in formal terms as "well directed measures".

It was discovered for example that working hours were too long. These were then reduced to 45 hours per week. Wages were too low. At present a domestic servant aged over 18 knowing how to cook can earn a gross 470 Marks per month. With very few exceptions no employers stick to this figure. They all

In many cases a status as member of the family is recommended. But the woman who formulated the above cited advertisement was well advised to say "member of the family if desired". The term "member of the family" has long since lost much of its appeal and is now looked upon as a relic of an interval

Despite all attempts to make household employment more attractive the profession remains unappealing. The main barrier is still the question of lack of prestige at a time when the whole world is seeking emacipation.

Added to this there is the great subconscious desire in the modern world for the maximum of indefpendence. A housemaid wants to be able to lead her own life. She does not want the private sphere to be controlled by the lord of the manor. She does not want rules imposed about visitors. For this reason taking a room in her employer's residence, even if it is furnished with a colour television set, is not attractive.

The lack of domestic servants is a symbol of social change and the spread of nocracy. Whatever is done to brighten up the job employment in the patriarchal atmosphere of a large house has no attraction for the modern woman.

The beauty of beer mugs

A three-man jury makes the vital dedsions at the final of a competition for the most beautiful beer mug. Gust Feldmaier casts a critical eye on Bavarian 'Stehmasskrug' as Michi Lang (left) and Karl Spangler (right) look

In future it seems that the housemak with a 5-day-week and flat of her own will be the usual thing. Another possibility is the "daily help". Otherwise there are large house-cleaning organisations which are highly mechanised. But all these solutions are comparatively expen-Sive. (WELT DER ARBEIT, 17 October 1969

The key in the coat of arms

DIE ZEIT handles facts like stones in a mosaik, patiently, carefully and minutely marshalling individual facts to provide comprehensive background coverage of what

An independent weekly, DIE ZEIT need not rush into print on day-to-day events. It has none the less decided opinions on the facts behind them. Watchful and critical in political affairs, committed on the arts and sound of judgment on matters economic and financial, DIE ZEIT is indispensable for people who care what happens to them. It is a newspaper for thinking readers. Write for free sample copies.

DIE

DIE

Disappointment is in store for anyone who hoped that Willy Brandt's policy statement would be the Federal Repubik's version of President Kennedy's inaugural address with all its eloquence, fire and visionary power. Those expecting a (Photo: Hans Enzwises) practical working programmine were moner satisfied.

Policy statements in the Federal Republic are not solo performances but coalition treaties that have been carefully worked out. The new Chancellor is never political star bathing in his own light. It an old tradition of the Social Demotrats that they are satisfied only when verything is neatly put down on paper for them to keep. This is all the more true then coalition partners are concerned.

frust is all right — but having are down in black and white is better. The policy statement is carefully weighed up and it is directed towards all groups, especially the farmers who are promised time and time again aid and scurity. It could almost be thought that the SPD only grasped the full importance

Hamburg, 11 November 1969

Eighth year - No. 396 - by air

HE BOUTHE WHEISGRAFT, HANDS, UND KULTUR

E PROMITA CREATE PROMITA DE ENTREMENTA DE LA SERVICIO DE LA COMPANSA DE LA PROMITA DE LA PROMITA DE LA PROMITA

IN THIS ISSUE

HOME AFFAIRS New Bundestag livens up political acena POUTICS SPD is where Wehner wanted them to be HE WOMEN

First Lady Rut Brandt - everywhere THINGS SEEN Modern art for sale in Cologne

Scotland the brave were unlucky to lose BACK PAGE

Las Vegas on the Rhine - future pleasure centre agriculture when they entered the premment. Not one important group forgotten. Full consideration was faid to war victims, civil servants and tren animals in need of care and protec-

Where there is unity between the Dalition partners the points of the policy lalement are as specific as possible. But gueness creeps in where there is a difference of opinion or where the wernment wants room to manoeuvre ach as in foreign policy. The policy statement of the new government thus follows normal practice.

No frills to Brandt's

policy statement

The new programme does of course differ from the terse statement of intentions that Konrad Adenauer used to give and also from the great harmonious picture of the world outlined by Ludwig Erhard. Neither is it a precise list of tasks for a limited amount of time and a limited number of areas of the sort that Kurt Georg Kiesinger produced for the Grand Coalition.

In 1966 Kiesinger limited himself mainly to financial policy and the budget and foreign policy. Brandt's policy statement is business-like and at times exhaus ting in the detail of its plans. But two trends are worth mentioning. The first is the aim described by Brandt with the words, "We want to risk more democracy." The second is the attempt to bring about more planning.
Ludwig Erhard had an unfortunate partiality for social politics. He regarded Kiesinger excluded social policies from his statement of intentions because of the enthusiasm for them. Because of Social Democrat tradition and his own particular inclination for

They are of course some parts of the What does democratisation mean in the material sense when applied to universities and factories? What does a social state consist of? What does humanisation

The German Tribune

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF THE GERMAN PRESS

vast difference of opinion between his party and his coalition partner. But this was not the only reason, He had no social policies Brandt is far better prepared and has succeeded in breaking new policy statement that still remain unclear. mean when applied to tax legislation, for instance, or educational planning?

(Cartoon: Felix Mussil/Frankfurter Rundschau)

C 20725 C

Belligerent attitudes from the Christian Democrats show that this is one of the great ideological controversics of the decade. It is good that the policy stateon the points contained in it. This presonts the chance of binding the citizen more to the state - and Brandt has realised this. This is where the new style is most obvious. As far as planning is concerned Adenauer always produced the best possible results from the chancellery process. Erhard was never a friend of planning and withdraw all too readily to the traditional liberal position of unhindered opposition of forces. Kiesinger talked a lot of plan-with the new formation of the Cabinet the new government has made a beginning in this field. The precise description of bills and reports leads to smoother, more ordered work. Government practice will show to what extent modern planning methods will be adopted. For the first time in a policy statement words like computer technique and educational technology were used.

summed up in a few short formulae with Kiesinger foreign policy took up almost half of the policy statement. Though of course this does not mean that foreign policy will be treated perfunctorlly by the new Cabinet. The new government seems to be following for the time being at least the old principal of CDU exminister Gerhard Schröder who believed that foreign policy was best kept at

Foreign policy in practice will depend on the response of the East Bloc, including the German Democratic Republic. to the initiatives of the Federal government. There are distinct possibilities that far

Continued on page 2

Federal Chancellor Brandt's government statement on foreign policy went further than any of the speeches on this subject made by his predecessors.

If people bear in mind the well-understood, long-term interests of this country and its people then they will not conside that Brandt went one inch too far. Like the whole of the government statement the part dealing with foreign licymust be read particularly carefully. claimed most decisively the right of self-Many sections say far more than they determination for the people in both appear to do at first glance. This is especially true of the most important and at the same time the most difficult problem, inter German relations.

The Chancellor put this subject right at the beginning of his speech before the reform programme for the Federal Republic and separated from the section on foreign policy which he concluded. He made it clear that in the end what has up till now been called the question of All-German policy can only be dealt with tion schemes for cooperation, twin states by a European peace conference. Chan-cellor Brandt underlined the policy his territory but have a relationship of a government which is to preserve the unity of the nation. He spoke of the common tasks and common responsibility and parts of Germany.

New emphasis in policy towards the GDR

"This right and the will to maintain it cannot be the subject of treaty negotiations," Brandt said.

It is only within this framework that we can see how Brandt and his government view the present situation in Federal Republic-German Democratic Repub-· lic relations. That is to say mutual renunciation of the use of threat of force, discussions aimed at settling by negotiaspecial kind.

In Bast Berlin whose central party paper Neues Deutschland is still demanding recognition in international law for the German Democratic Republic, this passage of Brandt's speech should lead to particularly careful consideration and this applies just as much to Moscow.

This is particularly so when one considers how Brandt's defence and foreign policies are unmistakably and credibly aimed at insuring peace as the essence of any intra-German relations.

Bonn will sign the non-proliferation treaty after the last few points of contention have been cleared up. In its policy for the development and reformation of the Bundeswehr in the future it will give a clearindication that the army is an instrument solely for preserving equilibrium and hence peace. When delivering such a speech a man is justified in being very self-confident. The Chancellor was, and this confidence is particularly obvious when he is dealing with the Allies.

The voice of the Federal Republic which is indispensible in a peace-time Burope has now taken on a new and very convincing tone. Hans Gerlach

(Kölner Stadt-Anzeiger, 29 October 1969)

MATHORITY HOME AFFAIRS

New Bundestag livens up political scene

THE GERMAN TRIBUNE

EX-MINISTERS BECOME VERY VOCAL CRITICS

Kandelsblatt

The Bundestag has again become lively. Genuine democrats can only greet this development with satisfaction. The government as a whole and individual members of it have given out reassurances that what they want is lively dialogue. They want to make the Bundestag what a parliament really should be. The balance of power within the Bundestag means that the new government can hardly avoid elevating the status of this country's leadership.

Government spokesmen during the debate on the new programme were right: in certain basic questions the opinions of the opposition party must be given consideration. The sixth legislative period should be marked by outstanding parliamentary vitality.

Even visually the scene in the Bundestag is completely different than before. On the day after Willy Brandt's statement of government policy, when it came to the first contentious vote, as many arms were raised on the Left-wing as on the Right. Only after a careful count was it possible to determine which side had

Undoubtedly this process will be repeated in future and will be time-consuming but at least it will show in a very doing its job and preserving democracy. Now in Bundestag debates there are not more will happen in this field than is

Continued from page I

It is no coincidence that the opposition is alarmed. It wants to put out warning signals and preserve the so-called legal positions. And the government will soon have to show its true colours in subjects such as of renunciation of force,

the question of the Oder-Neisse Line or the field of economic policy. Brandt has

Democrats and Christian Socialists who

Both government and opposition have recognised that economic policy decides elections. The Union parties will stake of Economic Affairs, has created. The pand them if possible. It does not need prophetic talent to forecast that there will be many armed battles in this field

little to secure the goodwill of the opposi-

but Kiesinger was not mentioned once.

of the complete financial plan.

with no quarter given.

Controversy is even more obvious in the Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty.

contained in the policy statement.

of opinion between differing ideas and and on the second day the Bundestag different personalities.

There are several changes in personnel and positions in the new Bundestag which are to be applauded. Franz Josef Strauss as a speaker on the opposition benches could very easily become a political force. Herbert Wehner as one of the leading spokesmen of the SPD-FDP coalition will not take second place to Strauss in originality and enthusiasm.

Members of the new government, as was shown clearly in the first major debate of this legislative period will always have to take a firm stand and will always be under pressure. Chancellor Brandt on the first day of the debate was often obliged to intervene. The days in which the government in the Bundestag could enjoy periods of relaxation are gone. Rainer Barzel, opposition leader, has called the Bundestag a forum for large-scale controversies. But has the sixth Bundestag become used to this role yet?

It seems at the moment as through the new government and opposition are drag-ging around behind them a lot of balast from the past weeks and months. In this two-day debate discussions often digressed from the programme of the new government to that of the old and talk centred on how justified or unjustified was the manner in which the new government set-up came into being.

It was obvious that the election campaign still after effects when the rebute exploded on its first day and threatened to blockade any further de-

New emphasis in policy towards GDR The government has faced up to the opposition with self-assurance and without behaving with familiarity. The SPD became great by using the words community and common possessions. But they are not included at all in the latest policy statement. They have drawn a strict dividing line between government and opposition, in much the same way as Adenauer did. But this is not necessarily to the detriment of the functioning of our democracy.

"This government's self-assurance will show itself to be tolerant," said Willy Brandt, "It will therefore be able to assess consciously challenged the opposition on the amount of solidarity contained in this point. And there are many Christian criticism." There were not many sentences of such moral and political imare eager to take up the challenge. The CDU/CSU doubtlessly wants to try and portance in the policy statement. This was an exemplary attempt to integrate establish themselves once again as pre-servers of a stable economy. Even though adult citizens with the critical opposition. It is all the more regrettable that they they can hardly criticise individual points were let down by the opposition who they will certainly question the reliability sponded with shricks of derision.

The policy statement is not a bold plan. The programme contains many pedantically exact details and is open to many interpretations. It is not the proeverything on destroying the aura that Professor Karl Schiller, the SPD Minister gramme of Left-wing adventurers. The respectable programme for action. The government will be trying to hold on to will to govern can also be seen. positions that they have gained and ex-

Adenauer pursued a successful policy from far more scanty statements of intention. Ludwig Erhard failed with his great view of the world. The programme of the new government in no way approaches a triumphant start à la Kennedy. But it There are other issues apart from economic policy where Brandt has done holds out the prospect that good, sober policies will be developed.

Rolf Zundel tion. He did show respect for Adenauer only staged fights but serious differences bate. But the storm clouds passed over seemed to have acquired a certain amount of inner control even with regard to the "Bayernkurier", the party journal of the

> Two trends seem to have presented themselves clearly as a result of this two-day debate. In certain spheres the opposition will have a tough time offering alternatives whereas in other spheres basic differences of opinion are already clearly marked out. This is particularly true for those topics in which the new government has put a stronger accent on change as opposed to those where it will continue

CSU in Bavaria.

The outstanding example is of course inter German relations. Now that the "two nations" have become a subject of official talks the opposition fears a mow-balling of recognitions for the German Democratic Republic by other countries, or the CDU/CSU can foresee a dark how for All-German policy on the horizon.

The opposition is trying to ding legalistic formulae. The government is relaxation of tension in intra-German elations. If the government's intention are made plainer and the opposition sticks to its previous point of view then crisis could develop. This could take 1 form of a split caused by the base questions of inner German policy.

It is difficult to foretell yet if this will come about. For a start the shape and aspect of the opposition is still largely unknown. In the debate it has been largely the men whose opinions at methods are well-known who have ma forward. It was ex-ministers who vokel their opinions whereas parliamentary to vices took a back seat.

All this can change very quickly a from this point of view the new Bundstag could claim a special interest.

Heinz Muman

(Handelsblatt, 31 October 1988

Strong opposition party's value

NO MIGHTY RUMPUS OVER REVALUATION

Now that the new government programme in Bonn has been made public the long awaited hour of opposition has struck. Have all the opportunities been used? All the tasks fulfilled? The contribution of a strong opposition is awaited with great expectations by the general public after the intermezzo of the Free Democrats' mini-opposition.

The spotlights were trained just as mercilessly on Kurt Georg Kicsinger, Franz Josef Strauss and Rainer Barzel as a few days before on Willy Brandt and

Once again people in the Federal Republic can look forward to fairly weighted discussion, cut and thrust debate and political excitements after years of comparative tedium.

It is desirable and necessary to provide a contrast to Willy Brandt's new policies. In the new Bundestag politicians are going to have to learn again how to carry on a heated debate. Up till now stale memories of yesterday's election campaign have set the atmosphere. Now is the time to start worrying about the nervous state of many a parliamentary gladiator. Members of the new Bundestag must find the correct way to get excited about the subject under discussion without their arguments turning into a verbal free for all.

As soon as these new techniques have been learned the opposition's controlling function will be put into operation and run smoothly. It will clear up points in the new course of Inter German Relations which are at present blurred. The Christian Democrat opposition will answer a lot of questions which are bothering members of the public.

Dialogues between the greatest brains of the opposition and Brandt or Scheel have shown clearly that on both sides there is true concern about the Federal Republic. The government wants to free itself at long last from the unsuccessful legalistic forumlae concerning the cohesion of the nation. The opposition fears business-like list unmistakably contains a that taking measures to recognise a second German nation will lead in the end to the one thing that no one wants -

> Opposition members have wisely not lost their heads about revaluation. They fought a rearguard action for outposts which they had lost. But they have laid bear the weaknesses of a concept which plans to make the Federal Republic into a (DIE ZEIT, 31 October 1969)
>
> Relf Zundel
>
> Angelly modernised nation within the next decade but they have kept quiet about alienation.

RHEIN NECKAR ZEITUNG

how this can be paid for. Presuma after this initial hour of opposition the will not pursue subjects of debate which lead nowhere, particularly regarding the German Question.

Their attack on the off-promised ta and social welfare gifts will be far more offectual. In this they are represchings policy in which the new govern med starts its career with a generous handout without making it perfectly clear that the citizen cannot have a modern nation without paying a price for it.

Dieter von König (RHEIN-NECKAR-ZEITUNG, 30 October 198

The German Tribune

PUBLISHER: Friedrich Remecke EDITOR-IN-CHIEF: Cheshard Wagnet ASSISTANT EDITOR-IN-CHIEF.

Otto Henz ENGLISH LANGUAGE SUB-EDITOR: GENERAL MANAGER:

Hesna Remerke Published by Remerke Verlag GmbH

23. Schoene Aussicht, Hamburg Z Tel . 2-20-12-56 . Teles. 02-1473 Advertising-rates fist No. 5

Printed by: Erogers Buch, and Verlagsdrucken Hamburg-Blankeness

All orticles which THE GERMAN TRIBUNE ore published in cooperation with the editorial tipe of leading newspapers of the Federal Republic Germany They are complete translations of the original text, in no way obridged or editorial redrafted.

in all correspondence please quale your subc number, which appears on the wropper to the rep Lyour address.

CENTREPIECE

No. 396 - 11 November 1969

Brandt's government policy statement

EXTRACTS FROM SPEECH MADE TO THE BUNDESTAG

We are resolved to uphold the security of the Federal Republic of Germany and the coherence of the German nation, to preserve peace and to co-operate in a European peace order, to extend the freedoms and prosperity of our people and to develop our country in such a way that its standing will be recognised and assured in the world of tomorrow. The policy of this Government will be one of continuity and of renewal...

This Government works on the assumption that the questions which have arisen for the German people out of the Second World War and from the national treachery committed by the Hitler regime can find their ultimate answers only in a European peace order. However, no one an dissuade us from our conviction that the Germans have a right to self-deter mination just as has any other nation.

The object of our practical political work in the years immediately ahead is to preserve the unity of the nation by decontracting the relationship between the two parts of Germany.

The Germans are one not only by tesson of their language and their history with all its splendour and its misery; we an all at home in Germany. And we still have common tasks and a common respossibility: to ensure peace among us and a Europe.

Twenty years after the establishment of the Federal Republic of Germany and of the GDR we must prevent any further tenation of the two parts of the German stion, that is, arrive at a regular modus tivendi and from there proceed to cooperation.

This is not just a German interest, for is of importance also for peace in Europe and for East-West relations, Our own attitude and that of our friends lowards the international relations of the GDR depend not least on the attitude of East Berlin itself. It is, by the way, not our Intention to curtail the benefits derived by our compatriots from international tade and cultural exchanges.

The Federal Government will continue the policy initiated in December 1966 and again offers the Council of Ministers of the GDR negotiations at Government kvel without discrimination on either tide, which should lead to contractually Breed co-operation. International recogk is out of the question. Even if there that two states in Germany, they are not foreign countries to each other; their lations with each other can only be of a

Following up the policy of its prede-cesor, the Federal Government declares that its readiness for binding agreements on the reciprocal renunciation of the use or threat of force applies equally with regard to the GDR.

The Federal Government will advise USA, Britain, and France to continue energetically the talks begun with the Soviet Union on easing and improving the thation of Berlin. The status of the city of Berlin under the special responsibility the Four Powers must remain untouchd. This must not be a hindrance to etking facilities for traffic within and to

We shall continue to ensure the viabilly of Berlin. West Berlin must be placed a position to assist in improving the plitteal, economic and cultural relations the two parts of Germany...

The foreign policy of this Federal Government follows up on the Peace Note of March 1966 and on the Policy latement of December 1966. The policy bid down in those documents was at the time approved by all parties in the House. The will to continue and consistently develop that policy makes reiteration of it unnecessary.

The Federal Government intends to increase its co-operation in the United Nations and in other international organisations. The same applies to world-wide agreements on disarmament and arms limitations which are gaining in impor-tance. In this respect the Federal Government will continue the policy which I, in the capacity of Foreign Minister, expounded on 3 September 1968 at the Conference of Non-Nuclear-Weapon States in Geneva.

We emphasise our fundamental readiness to have diplomatic relations with all states in the world that share our desire for peaceful co-operation.

The Federal Government rejects any form of discrimination, oppression and foreign rule which in our day again and again is jeopardising the peaceful co-exis-

The North Atlantic Alliance which has in future. Its firm solidarity is the prerequisite of joint efforts to reach a relaxation of tensions in Burope...

For our security we need friends and allies, just as they need us and our contribution for theirs. Without mutual confidence in the political steadfastness

of that recognition neither the Alliance

nor security can be maintained. We will therefore continue the present policy within and towards the Alliance, and we expect this also of our allies and their contributions towards a joint security policy and the mutually agreed joint

Just as the Western Alliance is defensive, our own contribution to it is defensive. Neither its training and structures nor its armaments and equipment make the Federal Armed Forces suited for an offensive strategy. The Federal Government will make clear beyond any doubt that its defence policy is based upon a ties between us and the United States of

For the Federal Government the close security efforts.

defensive principle.

existence will guarantee our security also are waiting for and urging the statesmen in future, its firm solidarity is the pre-

America permit of no doubt that the obligations will be honoured which the United States have assumed by treaty as well as out of conviction for Europe, the Federal Republic and West Berlin, Our common interests need neither additional assurances nor repeated declarations. They are strong enough to allow for more independent German Policy within a more active partnership.

Together with its Allies the Federal Government will consistently apply itself to the task of bringing about a reduction of the military confrontation in Europe. With them it will work for a simultaneous and balanced limitation of armaments and reduction of forces in East and

Special importance attaches to the forthcoming conference of the Six in The Hague. It may well decide on whether Europe will be taking a courageous step forward with respect to the interrelated subjects of the Community's international development, intensification and enlargement or whether it will get into a proved its value in the twenty years of its dangerous crisis. The peoples of Europe

Franco-German accord may be decisive in this respect. The Federal Government is prepared to lend the close contractual ties that steadfastness which should serve as a model of the type of relations which can today be established

The enlargement of the European Community must come. The Community needs Great Britain as much as the other applicant countries. In the chorus of European voices the voice of Britain must not be missing, unless Europe wants to

The Federal Government will promote the development of a closer political co-operation in Europe with the sim of evolving step by step a common attitude in international questions. We know that in this endeavour we are in particular agreement with Italy and the Benelux

Our national interest does not permit between European partners.

inflict harm on herself...

countries.

us to stand between East and West. Our country needs co-operation and co-ordination with the West and understanding with the East.

The German people needs peace in the full sense of that word also with the peoples of the Soviet Union and all peoples of the European East. We are prepared to make an honest attempt at understanding, in order to help overcome the aftermath of the disaster brought on Europe by a criminal clique.

We do not habour false hopes: Interests, power constellations and social differences can neither be dissolved dialectically nor must they be obscured. And yet our partners for talks must also realise: The right to self-determination embodied in the United Nations Charter applies also to the German nation. This right and the will to defend it are not negotiable.

We are not deluding ourselves to believe that reconciliation will be eesy or quick to achieve. It is a process; but it is time now to push ahead that process.

In continuation of its predecessor's policy the Federal Government aims at equally binding agreements on the nurtual renunciation of the use or threat of the use of force. Let me repeat: This readiness also applies as far as the GDR is concerned. And I wish to make as unmistakably clear that we are prepared to arrive with Czechoslovakia - our immediate neighbour — at arrangements which bridge the gulf of the past...

The Federal Government will make a number of short-term decisions which will make highlight its will to continue the lutherto prevailing policy in a steady and consistent manner:

- At the conference in The Hague the Federal Government will use its influence to ensure that effective measures for intensifying and enlarging the Community and for strenghtening
- 2. It will take up the offer by the United States of America to let German industrial potential participate in limited areas of space research.
- 3. It will take an active part in the work of the Committee set up by the Council of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization for the challenges of modern society.
- 4. It will shortly answer the Soviet Aidememoire on the subject of renunciation f the use of force, and suggest a date for negotiations in Moscow which have been suggested by the Soviet
- 5. It will transmit to the government of the People's Republic of Poland a proposal concerning the beginning of talks, therby responding to the com-ments made by Vladislav Gomulka on .17 May 1969.
- . It will sign the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons as soon as the clarifications requested by the last Federal Government have been

This Government will not toaday to anybody. It demands much, not only of others but also of itself. It sets concrete targets. These targets can only be attained and government undergoes change.

In a democracy a government can only work successfully if it is supported by the democratic commitment of its citizens. We are as little in need of blind approval as our people is in need of pomp and high and mighty aloofness. We do not seek admirers; we need critical people to think with us, to decide with us and to take responsibility with us.

This Government's self-confidence will express itself as tolerance. Therefore, it will appreciate the solidarity that voices itself as criticism. We are not chosen, we are elected. That is why we seek the dialogue with everyone who has this democracy at heart...

(Photo: AP)

PROFILE

Walter Scheel - a man of classical balance

Foreign Ministry following in the footsteps of Konrad Adenauer, Heinrich von and self-assurance stemming from the fact Brentano, Gerhard Schröder and Willy that he knows that he would not be Brandt. That is the price demanded by averse to a calm, civilised, enjoyable the Free Democrats for their particip- private life if insurmountable political ation in the government, a fact that has obstacles were placed before him. been known for moths.

Walter Scheel knows that his future performance as a minister will be observed critically, very critically by many. Perhaps that is why he has decided to make no changes in the line-up of state secretaries at his disposal, Georg Ferdinand Duckwitz and Günther Harkort are two excellent experts and will stand at his

" It has surprised many people in Bonn that Scheel selected a professor of socio-logy, Ralf Dahrendorf, as parliamentary state secretary. But news has gone around that Dahrendorf's work in the Foreign Office will be limited to culture policy, technology and peace policy.

Walter Scheel is not everybody's friend but he has no enemies. He has a cheerful nature, he is natural, serene and full of good humour. Scheel has never acted like an Atlas bearing the fate of the world on his shoulders. He is no thoroughbred

FDP starts off

mon: astough road

FDP leader Watter Scheel prophesied in Dortmund that his party would be on a difficult road for the next few years. He also stressed that in spite of losses in the Federal elections his party had suffered no loss of self-assurance. It was truer to say that its self-assurance had been

At a municipal party congress Scheel promised that all the FDP politicians who had become members of the government would pursue with all their strength a straightforward policy with the future in mind so that the FDP would receive fresh impetus. Scheel said that the FDP's main concern was to convince people with their performance so that in four years time the party would be stronger and exert more influence.

Next year's election for the Provincial Assembly of North Rhine-Westphalia would have a decisive effect on the success of the new Federal government, Scheel continued. The result would show how vigorously the Federal Government could continue to work.

In his first public speech as Foreign Minister Scheel said, "This government does not intend to let itself be outdone by anybody in the pursuance of the national interests of the whole population." The Federal government will do more for peace research and planning, he continued, and use its economic potential to give an objective picture of the body in the international exchange of technological experience, in the promotion of a liberal system of world trade and the the new political set-up in which the tag. balancing of revenue between the northern and southern hemispheres.

The leader of the FDP in North Rhine-Westphalia, Willi Weyer, assured that the FDP would be more than just an of Social and Free Democrats, must ed by large sections of the public Weichappendix of the SPD. He sharply attacked CDU leader Kurt Georg Kiesinger for wanting to throw the FDP out of all the various parliaments in the Federal Repu-

(Frankfurter Neue Presse, 27 October 1969) periority.

Walter School has now moved into the politician driven on by passion and striving for power. He is a man full of charm

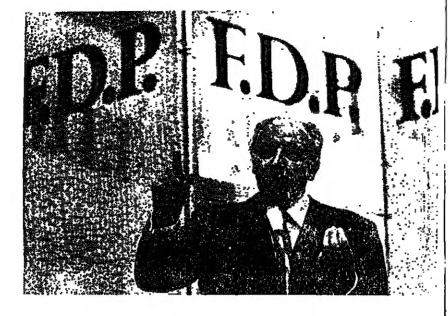

He was a night-fighter pilot in the war but survived. He is a man who always falls on his feet. When asked once now he managed to survive all the crises of his party, he replied in a self-mocking tone, 'I am the Mikoyan of the FDP."

But is he a fighter? Many people have doubted this and their doubts were strengthened in 1967 when Scheel yielded to Erich Mende in the struggle for party leadership. We asked the new For-eign Minister if he was basically lacking ambition. "As far as may own person is concerned, yes," he replied, "But I have ambition in my field."

We confronted him with the reminder that a lot of people did not consider him a fighter. "That's not true," he said, "I'm not a fighter pure and simple. I'm not the sort of man who goes out with his fists flying. But I have never given up a

Why then did he not allow himself to be put forward as a candidate for the party leadership at the 1967 party congress? Walter Scheel gave a characteristic, open answer. "I had made no long-term plans for the whole operation. Actually Woflgang Döring should have become Mende's successor some time earlier. Then it transpired that I was to do what he wanted to do. That came as a surprise. Carefully examining the situation I saw that there was nobody in the party apart from me who could do it. I therefore had

We were bound to ask to question of what moves such a man to enter politics. a 27-year-old son of a workman, a merciations of the metal and steel industry. I was fascinated by the tasks involved in the creation of a liberal economic system.
I was a strong champion of a liberal economic system and against the socialist version. At that time these questions went into the political field and I fol-

A wheelwright's son from the protest-ant town of Solingen, Walter Scheel joined the FDP in 1946. In 1948 he became a councillor in his home town and in 1950 a member of the Provincial Assembly of North Rhine-Westphalia.

Was he a National Liberal or a freethinker, we asked, "Neither the one nor the other. I was, and still am, a liberal typical of this area, an individualist, I am a politician of the centre."

In this context Walter Scheel stressed that he owed a lot to Middelhauve who was then the leader of the state's FDP. "He had the gift of attracting young men, me included, to the party and to polit-

What does Scheel consider most important? "The harmony between conviction and political action. I do nothing that I am not convinced about. And I do not speak of matters that I have not

The Benjamin of the Düsseldorf Young Turks who toppled the CDU Prime Minister Karl Arnold in 1966 celebrated his chant banker who had just returned from the war as a first lieutenant in the has receded modestly to the side. Life has Luftwaffe. Again Scheel gave a frank reply. "Chance," he said, "I was in champion of the Alpine air in Hinterthal champion of the Alpine air in Hinterthal Solingen working in the economic asso- in the Pinzgau area and a lover of French culsine and modern art, lost his first wife. He was forced to have two operations on his renal stones. Then came the depressing election defeat. But Scheel always pulled himself together again and his face is still unwrinkled.

What do his party colleagues say thim? On Scheel's fiftieth birthday the parliamentary leader of the FDP, Wolfgang Mischnick said, "Teamwork, convi-tion and a critical distance to thing, founded in self-assurance— that is the political style introduced into Bonn by Valter Scheel the Bundestag member."

Thomas Dehler, who once suggested Scheel as Mende's succesor, said, "Scheel has a great intellect, a lot of economic experience and the ability to formulate his ideas. He has a gift of saying the truth in such a way that it does not hurt yells

But Reinhold Maier, the grand old man of the Free Democrats, thought at that time that Scheel lacked the format, the substance and the personal qualities needed by an endangered party in 1 difficult situation.

The man whose flat in Düsseldorf served as a meeting-place for the conspirators of Amold's full in 1956 and who resigned in 1966 his post as Federal Minister of Development, forcing his party colleagues to do the same, now faces his decisive test as both Foreign Minister and party leader.

The time of night flights and trips into the unknown is over. The main concers for School the Foreign Minister is this country's security, for School the partileader the existence of the FDP. Neither the one task nor the other can be overcome by a man of classical balance, as Scheel once characterised himself.

(Photo: dps) (DIL WELT, 15 October 1969)

Herbert Weichmann takes the lead in Bundesrat

NOT EXPECTED TO PLAY A CONFORMIST ROLE

With the pleasant modesty that is the hallmark of a free man and evolved authority the Bundesrat, the upper house of the Federal Republic, took stock of its position.

With the dignified propriety that the Bundestag has presented to the public for Hamburg's Mayor cautiously examined more than ever before on the legislative loyalty of the Federal states. Willy Brandt's government, the first consisting legislative intentions passed by a Bundes rat where the Federal states controlled by the CDU and CSU have numerical su-

Trupkforter Rundschore

he last twenty years, Professor Herbert dress was for all the Federal states includ-Welchmann, a Social Democrat from ing Berlin, Herbert Weichmann steered Democrat from Berlin, could indulge in at the opening session of the sixth Bundes-

For the first time the ruling Bundesrat President did not complain about the lack of publicity for his legislative organ. Because the Bundesrat was underestimatreckon with a strong CDU/CSU oppos- mann concluded that the upper house was ition in the Bundestag and have their removed from the danger of changing its

As the decisions made by the Bundesrat did not have to find direct favour with the public Weichmann did not take up pedantic attitude towards the neighboul-ing Bundestag, the people's assemply. Yel he reminded his listeners with a certain amount of self-confidence that the Burdesrat in the past had never acted at 10 aide-de-camp to parties in the government or in opposition. The present Bundes he continued, could not be expected to play a conformist role in the political a nobody as young as this in the last This is a clear warning to the for parties represented in the Bundestag I The percentage of over-sixties has deshould prevent political manipulation b stated from 21 to 14 per cent. The ages the parties and stop the Federal Republic falling into the old ways of the Welman Republic when, according to Weichmann, the parties' hate and their demagogic action caused the demagogic action caus between forty and fifty provides members in he sixth Bundestag. forty per cent of all politicians belong to a group. Previously it was only thirty action caused the downfall of the parties themselves, parliamentarianism and final length of service also shows the rely the deomocratic state. This unambiguous entry in the records of the sixili Renation process. Almost a third of the members are new, 167 in all of whom 61 island to the Christian Democrats, 16 to the Christian Socialists, 84 to the Social Bundestag should suffice for some time.

(Frankfurter Rundschau, 25 October 1965

POLITICS

SPD is where Wehner wanted them to be

DETERMINATION TO MAKE OPPOSITION UNCOMFORTABLE

Mankfurter Rundschau

Herbert Wehner, the former Minister of All-German Affaires, has been elected parliamentary leader of the Social Democrats (SPD). With 197 of the 218 votes east for him Wehner did far better than party forecasts had estimated.

The result shows some of the esteem in which the deputy party leader and trusted democrat is held and not only by the 224 SPD members and the 13 from

Welmer, 63, surely expected no gratitude at that time. He is too much of a thoroughbred politician to have expected the and has suffered too many knocks for other people in his lifetime. But he will have felt some satisfaction. Those coptics who believed that his aims had falled or changed since the mésalliance with the Union parties are now refuted, the writer of this article and his newspaper among them. Wehner kept the pomises he made his friends and party at the end of 1966. He has not allowed himself to be led astray by changes of

The SPD has now reached the position where Herbert Welmer tried to steer them with his indefatigable performance, not during the smallest of tasks. But Weher decided to decline the honour of koming a minister. He preferred to roll is seeves up and work where he was Anded most urgently.

The fact that some people ask in nzzled tones why Wehner was treated so adly when Willy Brandt formed his government shows that this country has

Almost all critics were unanimous that he record of the fifth Bundestag was a respectable one. The question whether he sixth Bundestag will measure up to he last one cannot be answered for four

One factor has been recognised al-

Rady. Parliamentary conditions now

gem to be good, even better than in the seescademic too. At the same time it is imposed of more men, more civil ser-

and more people representing parti-

The youngest member of the new

Bundestag is an assistant, Dieter Schulte of the CDU, who is 28. The oldest member is Free Democrat William Borm

the is 73. The average age of the 518

mbers is 49, five years younger than that of the last Bundestag. When the tious age groups are compared the tjuventation of the Bundestag is seen bore clearly. Two members are under they in the present Bundestag. There olar interests.

the wrong picture of authority in the Federal Republic, a picture that is contrary to Basic Law, a picture that places a Federal Minister higher than the leader of the parliamentary party who, according to Basic Law, has to determine his party's policy. This constitutional point was manipulated by Konrad Adenauer and the Union parties and to correct it the Bundestag needs Herbert Wehner far mor urgently than the new government does.

Somewhat more coarsely it could be said that Herbert Wehner, Dresden born, is a typically Saxon type, as described by novelist Dieter Wildt. "A Saxon's curiosity ends when he can see how things are going to proceed. He likes to leave perfection to others."

Spotlight is now on Willy Brandt whose job it is to make everything a going concern. But Herbert Wehner still has the reins. Even though a Saxon is a born deputy according to Wildt he will never sly away from an important task that he has set himself— this is true in Wehner's case anyway.

The new Chancellor and his liberal co-pilot Walter Scheel doubtlessly appreciate the fact that Wehner is available for parliamentary work. The stability of the Brandt-Scheel cabinet depends on wafer-thin majorities in the Bundestag. The now SPD parliamentary leader is just the man required for the job, a man of determination and zest to work. Nobody knows that better than Willy Brandt. After he had been elected Chancellor he broke his usual reserve to embrace his comrade in lose sight of this scene if they want to do justice to Wehner in future. There is also another scene that it is important for

Herbert Wehner

(Photo: Archiv/SPD-Pressestelle Hamburg) Even though no one had disputed his right to sit on the front bench Wehner sat

until his election in the second row. This is a triviality—but a triviality characteris-tic of Wehner's unterstanding of democracy and the style that the frequently irritable and impatient politician can show when it comes to the test. This cannot be said of Kurt Georg

Kiesinger and Franz Josef Strauss in the first historic hour of the sixth Bundestag. Wehner and Brandt did the right thing forcing the two leaders of the Union parties into opposition to give them some time for consideration. They will also see to it that Kiesinger and Strauss will not be able to make themselves too comfort-

Eghard Mörbitz (Frankfurter Rundschau, 23 October 1969)

Bundestag's new make-up

Democrats and six to the Free Democ-

paylous Bundestag. Compared with its padecessor the sixth Bundestag is on Of those who entered the Bundestag mage considerably younger, a little me academci and as far as can be seen for the first time four years ago 122 are reamining. Those politicians who have been in the Bundestag for four years or less are now in the majority, providing well over half the 518 representatives. In the Bundestag there are now only 32 members who have been there since its formation in 1949.

With the rejuvenation of parliament the number of academics has risen. Most of the new members were educated at a university. More than half of all members are now academics.

With the rejuvenation of the Bundestar have been an increase in the number of representatives for whom politics is a them, about forty, are union functionprofession, though not always the main aries. Opposed to the employees and profession. The time has long past when the Bundestag was a parliament of dignitaries who took their seats and did their duty merely incidentally.

The future belongs to professional politicans who can devote all their strength to political work. Politics has become a trade to be learnt. Many of the artisans. new members of the sixth Bundestag gained their seats after working as assistants or advisers in parties, ministries, unions or other organisations.

But very few politicians have stated for the purposes of the Bundestag's handbook and the list of candidates that their man profession was political. In view of the widespread demands for more clearness it is surprising that more and more members tend to conceal their profession or give a roundabout definition. There are more than fifty executives, 34 lawyers, 35 editors or journalists and twenty jurists and economists- all of which say ittle of the true nature of the member's job. An executive could be a powerful dustrial leader or a small union functionary. Likewise a lawyer or jurist could be a trustee or a practising solicitor.

The only thing to be concluded from members' replies is that no fewer than 163 civil servants and local government employees are sitting in the sixth Bundesig, thus forming a third of the total. Little objection can be taken to this when it is considered that here legislature and executive work together.

Caution is advised when analysing the interest fronts in the new Bundestag. Approximately half the members belong to a trade union, but only a fraction of workers in the Bundestag are at least one hundred who belong to the establishment and middle classes. There are nineteen self-employed businessman, 49 leading executives, fifteen directors of associations of chambers of trade, fourteen retailers, chemists, hotellers and eleven

How these opinion groups will crystallise will not be known until the sixth Bundestag starts on practical committee work and divisions.

(Das Parlament, 25 October 1969)

Wehner versus Barzel in Bundestag

Clashes between government and op-position should be harder in the sixth Bundestag than ever before. Their form will be stamped in the main by two men who will be feuding with each other on the floor but will also have to cooperate in practice, Herbert Wehner, the new leader of the parliamentary SPD, and Rainer Barzel, his opposite number in the CDU/CSU, retaining a position he held in the last Bundestag.

It shows what value Willy Brandt attaches to the post that Herbert Wehner left the cabinet to take up his new duty. Wehner's Initial task is to keep tight control on the 237 Social Democrat members. With the government's narrow majority any idling could cause a crisis.

Herbert Wehner will also be the man who leads diversionary attacks on the opposition on behalf of the government on the floor of the Bundestag. He is the ideal man for this. He is firmly convinced of his political principles, asks no quarter and gives none and is always on top rhetorical form.

Rainer Barzel is a man who needs a strong challenge if he is not to branch out into meaningless phrases. An antagonist like Wehner is a blessing to him as all his political talent will be required.

Numerous false starts in the political sphere in the last few years have made Barzel more cunning. He now administers his office with prudence and aptitude. When Kurt Georg Kiesinger said that he was of course going to be party leader even though he did not want to be his have been making a premature judgement. There is no doubt in Bonn that the

Barzel-Strauss duo will soon push him into the background. After their duels of words on the floor Barzel and Wehner will have to sit a lot at the same table if the Bundestag is to function smoothly. The narrow majority demands a system similar to pairing in the British House of Commons. When a government member, even a minister, is unable to attend Parliament because of other business a member of the opposition also stays aways so that that majority is retained. If on the other hand the opposition wants to force a division it announces it at a previous occasion so that the government can summon all its

Only then can the legislative machinery run smoothly. Otherwise the only way out for the governing parties in critical situations is to take power into their own hands and remove the Bundestag's power of decision. This function obviously makes enormous claims on the two parliamentary leaders, not only on their tactical skill but aslo on their sense.

The third of these campaigners will be Wolfgang Mischnick of the FDP, leading Il band of 31 members. Mischnick's worries will concern primarily the right wing of the FDP who have little enthusiasm for the Socialist-Liberal coaliton. He will always have to exhort them to party loyalty as the next government crisis could be fatal for the FDP.

It would be logical for the coalition partners to agree to grant leaders of the parliamentary parties an allowance three times as high as those for ordinary members, thus putting them on a par with the President of the Bundestag as far as expenses are concerned. Their function may not be so representative as that of the Bundestag President but they are far more important politically.

(Handelsbintt, 17 October 1969)

WORLD OPINION

World reactions to change of government in Bonn

The new Social Democrat-Free Democrat coalition government in Bonn has begun office with goodwill from this country's friends all over the world. Washington, Parls, London and Rome have welcomed the Brandt government, and the Kremlin has made friendly gestures. Asian governments want to know what Brandt's policy towards Peking will be. Below is a resume of world opinion.

Washington

Public opinion in Washington (in the narrower meaning of the term) and the United States sees three elements in the change of government from CDU/CSU to SPD/FDP, the political element, the historical and one that can be of importance to economic relations between the two

As far as the historical element comes Into the question it is stressed time and time again that this is the first time since 1930 that Social Democrats have taken over the government of their country. A large sector of public opinion in the United States welcomes this. It is taken as a clear sign of the internal recovery of German democracy that the National Democrats were unable to enter the

As far as the personality of the Federal Changellor Willy Brandt is concerned, the political element will raise no difficulties. Unter the presidencies of Eisenhower, Kennedy and Johnson he was always a welcome and accepted friend of the West in his earlier positions of responsibility. It is known in Washington that a Brandt-Scheel government will never lose sight of its great aim of maintaining a state of peace and that friendship between the Federal Republic and the United States will continue.

If problems do exist then they are in the very complicated economic sphere. After the Mark has a fixed rate of exchange, after the much discussed question of payments to the U.S. forces in the Federal Republic has finally been resolved and trade is on the basis of the true value of adjusted currencies any economic difficulties should easily be surmounted as the majority of Americans have confidence not only in Willy Brandt but also in the Minister of Economic Affairs, Professor Karl Schiller.

Moscow

Moscow newspapers had two columns on "Willy Brandt-the new Chancellor of the Federal Republic". As well as the announcement of the election results the papers printed short biographies and articles from their correspondents on "The end of the Adenauer Era" and "From Kiesinger to Brandt".

Soviet newspapers and ministry functionaries still persist in their extremely eautious estimation of the intentions and chances of the new Federal Chancellor. In spite of Brandt's success in the first vote Moscow remains sceptical about the durability of the Mini-Coalition. Speaking of this Pravda did quote from the new Chancellor's first press conference in which he said that he could not imagine the coalition being split on any question in the next four years. This was the central point of all Soviet considerations and questions as Moscow wants to see the Federal government remain in power.

Nearly all newspapers reminded Willy

ments during the election dampaign. Pravda quoted Brandt on the border issue, "one cannot give up what one has not got" and commented, "the future will show how far this realistic attitude is reflected in the programme and in the practice of the government in Bonn."

The first thing that Moscow expects is Bonn's signature on the Non-Proliferation Treaty that Willy Brandt has already proposed to a certain extent. The overriding opinion here in Moscow is that voters in the Federal Republic want

London

In the weeks preceding 28 September the British public took serious interest in the Federal elections. They focussed their interest most of all on the question whether Hitler's heirs, Adolf von Thadden and his men, would succeed in entering the Bundestag.

But when the day of the election came

Now the new coalition between Willy Brandt's Social Democrats and Walter Scheel's Free Democrats is again a topic of conversation. Judgement in political circles varies according to political con-

People are almost unanimous in only one point and that is the expectation that the foreign policy of the new coalition will probably mean the end of an era if Brandt and Scheel really do succeed in contributing to detente with Eastern Europe. Both politicians have frequently stated that this is their goal.

It would find favour with the British government's policy and also correspond to the hopes of the general public.

Expectations differ wildly in the economic sphere. Within the Labour government and also industry it is believed that the new men in Bonn will be more consolidated than their predecessors in their approach to the problems of the international monetary system, especially concerning rates of exchange and paper money issued by the International Mo-

These circles also realise that it is high time to curb inflation in the Federal Republic or repress it entirely by revaluing the Mark.

Conservative circles fear that the new government will compete more sharply with British exports in markets that preferred British goods. Advocates of Britain's entry into the Common Market, both Labour and Tory members, hope that Bonn will now pay more than lip-service to helping Britain join the EBC.

Opponents of British entry fear that in lic's butter which would lead to a rise in respondent of the newspaper stressed in

Rome

It would be no exaggeration to say that the whole of the Italian press sees advantages for Italy now that a coalition between Social and Free Democrats has taken over the functions of government in the Federal Republic.

Not only the left-wing newspapers, including communist publications, see in the political changes in the Federal Republic a chance for a general detente between East and West. The conservative press in the north that at first did not conceal its desire for a continuation of the Grand Coalition of Christian and Social Democrats and a victory of the CDU now makes favourable judgement of the mini-coalition even with regard to Italian interests.

Judgement is positive for both political and economic reasons. The SPD take-over of power is seen as a guarantee for an unmistakable anti-Fascist attitude which is a true need for most Italians, even conservative Italians.

Moreover people always greet anything that could contribute to inner-European detente- and the main stumbling block to this is commonly supposed to be the German problem.

In the efforts of the SPD to improve the social balance between employers and employees without extending worker participation Italians see a way to solve the the new and bloody resumption of the serious social tensions that are shaking treather in Northern Ireland over-

Paris

French expectations of the new Federal government are marked by a mixture of hope and fear. Paris believes that Bonn will make further progress towards East and West- Willy Brandt's policies will be

New diplomatic and economic talks with Moscow, Warsaw and East Berlin are expected and France greets this development. The inflexible positions defended by the CDU/CSU have long been considered here as an obstacle to European detente understanding and coope-

The fear has however been expressed that in its policy towards the East the Brandt-Scheel government could become a rival of France. The ghost of Rapallo, the possibility of direct agreement between Germany and Russia to Western Europe's cost has been recurrent fear for half a century within the walls of the French Foreign Office.

Similar fears are being expressed concerning a possible closening of relations between Bonn and London for a speedler discussions on the entry of the United Kingdom into the EEC.

Eastern Europe

Many leading communist newspapers in Eastern Europe have commented on the new government formed by Willy

Rude Pravo, the organ of the Czech Communist Party, welcomed the change future British agriculture will have to of government as an important pre requisubsidise the inefficient agriculture in site for possible alterations in the policies France and finance the Federal Repub-Brandt and Walter Schoel of their state- the cost of living in the United Kingdom. his report that there were intersting and eminent politicians in the new government formed of parties that had wonthe confidence of the public because they had advocated a policy of peace and understanding and reconciliation with the Soviet Union and the other Socialist

The paper continued that it was in the interest of the Federal Republic itself that Brandt's government pursued a nolicy of peace. There is no doubt that every positive step in this direction will be met with a positive answer from socialist countries, the paper went on to say and added, "it is not necessary to tel Brandt what he must do to lead to reconciliation with the East." The only criterion for Brandt was deeds, stated Rude Pravo.

Warsaw has so far made favourable udgement on the new government is Bonn. A special point was made that the Ministry for Expellees and Refugees had been wound up and the Ministry of All-German Affairs had had its name changed.

Ion Gheorghe Maurer, the Rumanian Prime Minister sent a congratulatory tele gram to Federal Chancellor Willy Brand expressing the hope that there would be deepening of relations between Rumania and the Federal Republic in the Interest of the two States, peace and cooperation in Europe and the rest of the world.

Main interest shown by Asian diplomatic circles in the new Bonn government is concentrated in future policy towards Eastern Europe and China, Bonn's stitude towards the Non-Proliferation Tres ty and its relations with East Berlin.

Apart from the late Konrad Adenauer the first Chancellor after the war, Wily Brandt is the only politician from the Federal Republic known in the wider political circles of East and South-East Asia. Primarily as governing Mayor of Berlin, but also as Foreign Minister, he became popular from New Delhi to Tokyo when speaking of his country's

Many prominent Asian politicians con sider him as a personal or political friend. On of these is Singapore's Prime Minister, Lee Kuan Yew, co-chairman with Willy Brandt at the Socialist International in

Willy Brandt has equally close and personal relations with Indonesia's Forcign Minister, Adam Malik, and Takeo Miki, the former Foreign Minister of Japan and now leader of the left-wing in the ruling liberal democratic party of

In these areas Brandt is considered to be a prototype of the international German politician. His courtesy, unconvential charm and linguistic, proficency

For a Socialist politician Brandt has a conservative reputation. Yet it is generally accepted that under him the Federal Republic will depart from the uncompromisignly anti-communist course of revious conservative governments in

One of the first questions asked by diplomats in Hongkong, Tokyo or Bangkok is Brandt's attitude towards Peking. Relations between the Federal Republic and the Soviet Union and the improvement receive priority so this els certain limits right away to any flirtation with China.

Remembering statements by Brand while he was still Foreign Minister it is considered probable that the Federal Republic will try to give its extensive, and growing, trade with China a firmer basis by establishing a Trade Mission in Peking.

Particular attention is being paid in Asia to the development in the relations between the two parts of Germany. It considered that the Hallstein Doctrine is doomed to certain death.

(Fram: VORWARTS, DIE WELT,

THE WOMEN

No. 396 - 11 November 1969

First Lady Rut Brandt everywhere only friends

Rut Brandt belongs to that rare group of people who have no enemies and are popular with everyone they meet. Even people who are not fond of her husband, either for political or personal reasons, can find words of praise for her.

The adjective "charming" when used to describe her is not to be taken as vain flattery but as the most appropriate description of her radiant personality.

She is not particularly fond of entertaining but in the last ten years she has become accustomed to her social duties and has gained a lot of confidence in the company of strungers. One thing she still adamantly refuses to be involved in is public speaking. She also fights shy of interviews. Rut Brandt prefers pleasant, unforced conversation.

One very quickly makes contact with her, quicker than with her famous husband. Rut Brandt prides herself on a trim appearance and an excellent sense of taste, which makes her one of the best dressed women in this country. She wears a plain and rather sporty style of clothes. When in the mid-fifties she entered the Berlin Social scene in model clothes of haute couture many people whispered behind their hands: "And she calls herself a Social Democrat!"

Very quickly these party members came to realise that an elegant appearance is very good for publicity. In this Rut Bandt is very different from Jacqueline Onassis. Only in the later years in Berlin did she finally come to buy herself a mink coat. And she is still today rather exerved in her choice of jewellery.

More important, than her wardrobe are her family and home. She takes a great pride in them. In Berlin she herself did a ot towards keeping house, including

In those days when asked what her husband's favourite meal was she replied: "Smoked meat with cabbage."

For more than ten years the Brandts lived in a row of houses near Schlachtensee, one of Berlin's lakes. Just like the other women there Rut Brandt shopped at the market and on Saturday afternoons she would wash the car.

First of all the Brandts drove a Volkswagen and then a Karman-Ghia which they won at the press ball and finally an Opel Rekord. For years she was the family's chauffeur. Then she says, "Willy took up driving but without great success. He gets too anxious that he could knock over a child playing in the streets."

In their years in Berlin they always kept the three lively children Peter, Lars and Matthias active. Peter and Lars were educated in a completely democratic way. Rut says: "My husband was very patient with them. He never hit them. But me, sometimes I could not stop myself whacking them, particularly Peter when he was very naughty.'

Afterwards Rut Brandt always apologised for the children. Meantime Peter has left home and is studying in Berlin. Whenever his mother feels intuitively that he needs her she rushes there.

Rut Brandt's political influence is nil. Nor does she have any ambitions in this direction. She has absolutely no sense of

When Willy Brandt was presented with the difficult choice of returning to his homeland or staying in Norway just after the War, she said: "I can not advise you. You must make the decision yourself. If you go I will follow."

course she is interested in politics, but never discusses it in public.

True to her word she followed Willy Brandt to this country in the spring of ter his wife was very reluctant to 1947. In the autumn of the same year the goodbye to her adoptive home town.

two married. From that moment on Rut always willingly did whatever was neces-sary to help Willy in his career. She was with him in the difficult post-war years in confusion she was often worried about her husband's safety. Her son Peter was born during the Blockade in the middle of a power cut.

ter his wife was very reluctant to say

Chancellor Willy Brandt with Rut and their son Matthias

(Photo: J.H. Daichinger)

In this time of Stalinistic politics and feres with his professional affairs. Of Rut became a true Berliner despite the

When the time came for Willy Brandt to leave Berlin to become Foreign Minis-

But in Bonn she quickly made new friends: Baroness Guttenberg and the wives of Conrad Ahlers, and Horst Elun-

In the villa on the Venusberg she introduced a degree of femininity. Rut Brandt accepts the fact that her husband s becoming more and more "eaten up"

She said recently: "I am elad for sails and television —otherwise my husband would never tell me anything. Sometimes think he even dreams politics." But there was not a trace of irony or bitter-nose in her voice. She, accepted, lib situation happily.

(Frankfurter Neue Presse, 23 October 1969)

Katharina Focke (Photo: AP)

A few days ago in Bonn there were many people who did not know whether Katharina Focke wrote her name with a V or an F. Social Democrat Bundestag member Katharina Focke, Ph.D., 47, from Cologne South consti-tionery, moved into her office in the Federal Chancellery as a Parliamentary State of the Cologne South Consti-State Secretary. This was the same office in which Herbert Blankenhorn once cartled out of appointment of Foreign Miniser under Konrad Adenauer.

After her lightening career in the midst

Katharina Focke - an unknown quickly making a name of power Katharina Focke, after talks ities of Zürlch, Oklahona and Hamburg. with Willy Brandt's Minister without Portfolio Horst Ehmke, is now to concern herself particularly with European policy, science, education and relationships between Federal states and the central gov-

In the provincial assembly of North Rhine-Westphalia she was the SPD's expert on further education, and since 1961 executive secretary of the committee for the structure of European policy.

European policy is her hobby. It is, so to speak, an inheritance from her father, the publisher Ernst Friedländer, who was a very important figure in the years of the Adenauer era.

Katharina Pocke comes from Bonn and lives in the Marienburg district of Cologne, where top people live, the diplomatic quarter and the millionaires district. She has been alone in a pleasant old villa since her husband died young after a short marriage. Her address is a further reminder of Konrad Adenauer: 34 Pferdmenge Strasse.

She continues to live there in the south of Cologne since the six-lane Cowork faster than she could have done from Düsseldorf.

She has studied many subjects includ-ing economics, German, English, history,

She has been a journalist and a translator.

Katharina Focke is an intellectual with a rather sporty elegance, and served as a rather exotic example to the older SPD members in the Düsseldorf provincial assembly in 1966. She first joined the SPD in 1964 because she approved of their "more convincing European poli-cy". She almost found a place on the party committee immediately but the older members objected to such quick

When the left-wing students started revolting Katharina Focke had to talk in plain and understanable language

This woman from upper-middle-class Marienburg soon found the expression "dear comrades" slipping easily from her lips. She quickly and resolutely accustomed herself to the SPD's familiar form of

After three years in the provincial assembly she stood as a candidate for the Bundestag. Prospects did not seem too bright. Trade Unionist Benno Feckler had already turned down this 'thoroughly bourgeois' constituency, Cologne South logne matorway helps her to get to her in which the SPD in 1965 had only ter Heinz Klihn who would have made her received 37.8 per cent of the vote as opposed to 48.9 per cent for the CDU.

Katharina Focke's election campaign enthalled an ever-increasing number of political science and law at the univers- SPD helpers. Since June she has been having an information session every week at the Market. She published her own election campaign hand-out Im Blick-punkt. In one edition of this there appeared an article by Willy Brandt in which he stated that Katharina Focke was an absolutely essential candidate for Bonn. The two of them knew each other flectingly from conferences on Europe.

Part of her election campaign was to do the rounds of pubs in working-class areas of Ehrenfeld in which she would stand at the bar and discuss politics. "This had a colossal effect," the new State Secretary sald. Only in the final weeks before the election did she see a glimmer of hope that she would be successful.

The election result was a triumph for her. It was the greatest local growth rate for the SPD in North Rhine-Westphalia. Their share of the vote rose 10.2 per cent rom 31.8 per cent to 48 CDU's vote dropped from 48.9 to 39.6 per cent. The greatest prize for the victorious woman was the knowledge that she had culled 3,000 primary votes more and obviously from voters who had given their second vote to the FDP.

Even before Katharina Pocke, the new-comer, could establish herself in the Bonn SPD group and move into her office she was in the government. She herself is astonished about this. She feels certain that North Rhine-Westphalia Prime Minisa local government minister in 1970 and only let her go to Bonn reluctantly had a word with Willy Brandt which opened for ther the door to the Palais Schaumburg.

(Süddeutsche Zeitung, 24 October 1969)

THINGS SEEN

Modern art for sale in Cologne

Cologne's "Kunstmarkt" (art market) established itself with one fell swoop two years ago with its first presentation. This provided a genuine source of information which has been needed for a long time. It is no longer true to claim that the value of an object d'art should be regarded seperately from the price it fetches on the

The price of a work has become an exact gauge of its value, excluding such factors as fashion trends, inflated and deflated prices and the correspondence between supply and demand on the art

The third Kunstmarkt does not differ substantially from those of the two previous years, as far as presentation and works on offer are concerned. Once again there is a good all round selection of respectable and conunctically viable works. Few galleries have limited themselves to just four or five of their most well-known artists, which gives the impression that the exhibition is overflowing with pictures and other works with one work crowding out another.

A satisfactory solution was found by Munich's Heiner Friedrich Gallery and Düsseldorf's Konrad Fischer Gallery (exhibiting for the first time this year). Both of them take one artist for a contrepiece Friedrich has selected a series of Warhol paintings of all sizes and Fischer has put three large-size wood and aluminium ob-jects by Sol LeWitt on show.

Visitors can see a selection of sober and objective information pamphlets. These are in the form of ring-back books containing pictures and price lists for other artists.

One aspect of the 1967 and 1968 Kunstmarkt which had a bad influence on the overall image of the sales exhibition seems to have disappeared more or less. Obviously this show is not just a large collection of unwanted left-overs from the galleries' annual programme. It is far more a case of worthwhile saleable productions of renowned artists which have been especially selected for Cologne. Three collections of pronounced value are offered by the galleries Schmela, Der Spiegel and Zwirner.

The works that these galleries have put on exhibition are a fantastic collection of the big names in the art world - Arman, Fontana, Tapiès, Segal, Wasarély, Wesselmann, Louis and Warhol, which are in the 15,000 to 100,000 Mark price range.

This provides a documentary look at representative works for Cologne progressives. Financial viability and a legitimate striving for prestige go hand in hand

This year as before there is a large supply of works of small or medium value, all kinds of artistic objects and paintings priced below 10,000 Marks, providing the solid foundation of the art world in this country.

Up till the middle of the week it looked as if the graphic arts were not so much in demand as in previous years. Works of the pop era which in recent years have somed in popularity are still waiting in all the rooms of the gallery for purchasers.

Proof of the fact that the art purchasing public has become more selective emphasised the demands they made of biased claims is hemmed in by national

Those who set out to approach these boundaries?

Beuys' Volkswagen bus with sledges at the Cologne Kunstmarkt and is no longer prepared to pay large prices for works simply because they have a name lies in the failure of many of Fontana's works to conunand a high price. Demands of between 27,000 and 55,000 Marks for his works have found

On average the price for the "Concetti" has doubled since last year's Cologne exhibition.

Of the more important works the ones to have been sold so far are the following: An object by Denys, composed of a table, stool and wire which went for 50,000 Marks to the Kalser Willielm Museum in Krefeld; two of the large 'plastics' made of stainless steel by Heerich (18,000 Marks); and a picture in nails by Ucker (12,000 Marks). These three came from the Schmala Gallery.

From Zwirner came a Klapheck, 20,000 Marks, and a group of object in the 1,000 to 10,000 Mark price range.

The three pictures by Albers exhibited by the Müller Gullery from Stuttgart were offered at an unusually low price in Cologne, 17,500 Marks, and they have been sold. So has a sculpture picture by Lee Bontecou (40,000 Marks).

Federal Republic artists on whose behalf the gallery has exhibited (Pfaller, Quinte and Wintersberger) despite having

Continued on page 9

A few years ago it was still possible to get at least a fair idea of what non-Questions posed by avant garde commercial films were being produced from the film festivals at Oberhausen and film festivals Nowadays, when films seem to be the preserve of cranks and eccentrics to an ever greater extent and are often a medium for attacking the established norms of society, this sort of speculation is no longer possible.

It was not merely by chance that much of the talk in Mannheim was concerned with problems of the industry. How is it possible to promote films which are not specifically designed to satisfy the demands of the cinema-going public and which attempt to give food for thought and throw new light on important top-How can these non-commercial way has been proved by the Mannheim films be made into box-office successes? How can they even be brought to the attention of those films lovers who are prepared to bear the burden of having to think about what they are viewing?

Bridging the gap between the private phere of film production and the glare of tunate and largely unintentional parochial the public eye demands financial means air about them. This was only underlined which are not available particularly for by the discussion groups, since the youngthose young film producers who form the er Federal Republic film-makers often avant garde.

Even films officially commissioned by these festivals. the controlling board of the Society of Young Federal Republic Film-makers are often restricted to private showings.

Would it be correct to say that the Socialistic ideas of those who make such

Of the films commissioned by this society in recent times six out of nine have not been put on general release since films critically stumbled into an abyss of it was considered that they had very little unbounded subjectivity making it difficommercial potential. They did not mea- cult to "find oneseif". In fact the same sure up to the public taste, (or perhaps applied to everyone who was watching pander to it). pander to it).

In order to find a public for these

"way out" films it is necessary to start a the silent, static "Kelek" of Werner Nekes special circuit, which would give the films and the noisy dynamism of Birgit and suitable advertising, without the custom- Wilhelm Hein's "Rohfilm". But a conary accent on nude bodies and scenes of necting link between these productions is not too difficult to find. They all cut violence and sadism. themselves off from the viewer. They try for this? Once again the tired old joke about how the theatre in this country to avoid communicating anything, and receives 400 million Marks subsidy where-Furthermore they question everything, including the man who made them and as the film world receives a mere four million has been dug up.

That a "different cinema" is on the the audiences which view them.

Vlado Kristi has been doing this for years. He repeats the formula in his latest festival. But in future the significance of "Capriccio Italien". He invents picthe Mannheim and Oberhausen film festtures and then lets them disintegrate by ivals will rest on how far they can open their portals to innovators from abroad. means of montage and camera shake. He destroys dialogue, which is abstruse to In 1969 both festivals had an unforstart with, by means of sound effects Cinema of the Absurd remains Cinema of the Absurd and Kristl remains Kristl. with his usual brand of humorous and amusing nihilism.

On the other hand in "Kontokorrent 6 493 738" Peter Staimmer produces an accumulation of atrocitics from a gruesome, crippled world. This film even omits that certain abstract something with which many of these film-makers save their films from tastelessness or

The one reality worth experiencing it seems is the beatnik world of hashish. This one-hour film had possibilities as a There was a vast difference between . simple reduction to pictorial experiences.

But its ideology is stunted, offering only escapism as an answer.

Werner Schroeter goes much further his "Eika Katappa". He begins with striking scenes; a bloodstained face, a group of saints praying in a wood, Siegfried and Kriemhild in love and death.

At the beginning this is a powerful moving, ironic twisting of myths, full of tension as it hovers between reverence

The mythological superstructure which still has a considerable influence on the lives of all of us, even if we do not notice it, is very much undermined by Schroeter.

The glorification of suffering and death such as is viewed with lustill pleasure on the opera stage and often in the cinema screen is linked up with war and accidental death.

But Schroeter harms his own reput tation by overdoing opera parodet particularly "La Traviata" and "Rigol an end after 144 minutes of exertion.

Costard's "Unterdrückung der Fra (Suppression of the Woman) was probably the most successful film at Mannheim but it was certainly Schroeter's Katappa" which was still attracting attention and providing the topic of conversation days later.

In summary it can be said that Mann heim 1969, despite all the objections and flops, was the most important film fest ival of the year in the Federal Republic, even though this fact can be attributed to a certain amount of fortunate coincid

· (Frankfurter Neue Presse, 16 October 1909)

THINGS HEARD

Contemporary music at Donaueschingen

Why are contemporary music festivals arranged? Donaueschingen, together with Darmstadt the most prominent platform for this country's musical avant-garde, has witnessed many stages in musical development in the years of its existence.

In the twenties it shocked middle-class citizens by being the workshop of New Objectivity. After the Second World War it became a centre for musicians in this country to catch up on the trends of the twelve years since I litler came to power. Later it became the centre for new music from al over the world. What should Donaueschingen's role be today?

The Festival is limited to one weekend with two to four events. This demands a strict selection process on the part of the aganisers. This seems to exclude the danger of the terrible incidental events seen in the mass show of the International Society for Modern Music and the long festivals at Warsaw, Zagreb and

But there are problems connected with this. In a bad year the limitation does not accessarily mean that anything interesting will be produced. A small number of works being performed for the first time can be as meagre and wearisome in the same way as a large number can be ansoying and wearisome. And it is far taker for two concerts to fail than twenty. Furthermore even the most wellinformed artistic direction — and the Bonaueschingen Festival is arranged by reperson traditionally the most convertt with modern music, the senior boadcasting Service, Dr Heinrich Strobel - can sometimes reflect present trends mongly or unfavourably. A director night approach the subject at times less beir works offered at reasonable prices have not yet found a footing among collectors.

Continued from page 8

This particularly applies to Wintersberger who was honoured with the Grand ha at the Paris Biennale and whose paintings are on offer at a very reasonable 3,000 Marks.

All the paintings and 'plastics' by Astes, put on show by Munich's Stangle Callery, were sold for between 12,000 and 22,000 Marks to buyers in this country. Paintings by Poliakoff who died a few days ago, and Niki de Saint Phalle's Polyster Name of Suppose holyester-Nana have changed owners.

The Cologne Kunstmarkt this autumn pined for itself international significance as an exchange and barometer for art. Never before have so many foreign visitms been seen in Federal Republic gallules. Art experts and art lovers came from Bitain, the United States, Italy, the Netherlands and France. It seems that at long last modern Federal Republic art ch as presented in Cologne has finally lorged vital connections on the interational market.

The initiators of this new market for h.c. artmann and Gerhard Rühm. te arts which has room for growth are he Cologne art dealer Kümmel and book-teler Siebrasse. What has been created is forum for art and artists who are not jet firmly established. In summary it could be said that the Cologne Kunsttarkt is yet another indication of the beral atmosphere which pervades the andem art world in the Federal Republic and particularly in Cologne where the arts from an objective musical consciousness as from his own indisputably personal taste which is reflected in certain directives connected with commissioning works.

> Christian Herchenröder. .. (Handelsblatt, 17 October 1969)

Donaueschingen is, structurally, a festival which has something to offer the expert. People do indeed come from the towns of Strasbourg, Freiburg and Basel but the old princely town of Donau-eschingen is so far off the beaten track in the Black Forest that everybody is one big family, an esoteric circle of avantgarde composers, representatives of broadcasting and publishing and musical critics. Care is taken of the public afterwards - results are passed on to them via radio broadcasts and press reports. But the concerts themselves do nothing to alter the state of withdrawal which is now the target of the avant-garde.

To reconsider the social premises of this sort of festival in future would perhaps be more important still than the pains taken to perform original works of quality. As an institution Donaueschingen could not remain untouched by this. The musical policy of the Southwest Broadcasting Service shows that those responsible are well aware of these problems and are considering what significant measures can be taken.

The number of works performed for the first time was particularly small this year. Two orchestral concerts sufficed. Perhaps the most significant performances were two newworks by Mauricio Kagel, Duo and Hallehijah.

the first of the two orchestral concerts were being heard for the first time in this country. The one was Luciano Berio's Sinfonia. To the four movements played at the Royan Festival the composer has added a fifth which was played for the first time in Donaueschingen under the guidance of Ernst Bour. The Swingle Singers were accompanied by the South-west Radio Orchestra in a performance that was intended to stress the purity of the music. It succeeded primarily in the third movement based on the scherzo of Mahler's Second Symphony. Its multi-

Pierre Boulez (right) and Wolfgang Fortner at Donausschingen festival

while the singing and speaking parts of the Swingle Singers remained more discreetly in the background. The fulness of structural references — in this case to the first movements — is even greater in the final movement than in the variation on

The second work that had not been performed in this country was Pierre Boulez' latest work Domaines for clarinet played by Walter Boeykens) and instruments. It represents an attack on open form and flexible performing conditions founded a little puritanically in the struc-ture of the work, far different from those of Kagel, Schnebel or Cage, at least in the effect of the incomparably freer, theatrically fascinating forms.

The musical results are somewhat half-hearted though some of it has a fine chamber music character. Only in the best passages are we reminded of Boulez' period of serial technique. The work seems to be far more a resonance of past times than a signal light pointing towards the future and the many stimuli given by the title are not developed further. Boulez himself conducted.

In the second orchestral concert works by less well-known composers were to be heard. There was the first performance of a work from the Argentine, Hilds Dian-

tude of associations came out clearly da's musically interesting Ludies 1. Even more charming in the alternation of fixed and graphically notated music was Ixamatl by the Mexican composer Manuel

The Rumanian Anatol Vieru has succeeded in realising an original conception in his Sundial. Above a very soft background can be heard quasi-concrete aural sensations, episodes with features of association and with titles such as "Crash and explosion", "Metal and iron", "Pins and needles" and "Street Traffic". An explosive trumpet solo has been worked into the musical fexture to provide a

Alfred Schnittke, a Russian, limited himself in his ... Piantssimo... to a soft score that continues on its own as if lust way to octaves and a fortissimo passage. The four parts which would fit to a certain extent the designation Alusic ... In felt-slippers given by Vieru to his workshow an all too uniform trend of the annual Donaueschingen sample of works. All last about fifteen minutes, all take great pains to have as little volume turbulence as possible and nearly all fit the usual concert framework in their orchestral composition and formal shape.

Hans-Klaus Jungheinrich

(Frankfurter Rundschau, 22 (Jetober 1969)

Wolfgang Bauer's new play Change shows a person who sets out to manip-Fatal change of ulate another and then finds out too late that he himself is being manipulated. The play had a very successful premiere in Vienna a few weeks ago and it has just had its premiere in this country at Hanover's Landestheater.

Wolfgang Bauer is 27 years old and from Graz. He likes to give his plays English titles. His spectacular one-act play performed last year and everybody's topof conversation at that time was called Magic Afternoon. In Change he employs an ironic alienation technique to depict figures and events of the Vlenna Group which includes men of letters admired by him such as Konrad Bayer, Oswald Wiener, Bauer's latest play deals with a change of identity that has fatal consequences. Fery, a rootless artist and poet, and a very suspicious art critic both want to bulld up Blasius Okopenko, a mechanic and amateur painter who has arrived from the provinces on a motor bike, into a sort of Lower Austrian Rousseau and then let him fall when he is at the summit of success so that his only way out is

But Blasius has a primitive vitality and soon sees through this macabre game. He down to the smallest details and the identity

willingly cooperates as long as it brings him advantages. But he really spoils the plans of the two presumptious friends. He steals Fery's fiancee and makes her pregnant, he seduces the girl's mother and marries her and finally puts Fery out of action by seeing that he has an argument with the police and ends up in hospital with the police and ends up in hospital with a builet in him. In the final exciting scene set in Blasius' elegant studio the host suggest that they change clothes and roles - hence the title - and Fery becomes a victim of his own plans and hangs himself.

This new play shocks as is the fashion and is at the same time extraordinarily amusing. Wolfgang Bauer give a critical and yet loving picture of the youth of today who protest in vain against the insignificance of their existence.

The characters are well delineated, their reactions are psychologically correct, dialogue and atmosphere tally right all the logical consequence of an ancient iragedy, is skilfully set in the present age. Change confirms what Magic Afternoon already hinted at. Bauer is on the way to becoming a latter-day Ödön von Horváth. As a precaution the management of action, dramatically dovetailed and with-the Hanover theatre said that in their opinion Change was not suitable for minors under sixteen years of age.

Horst Zankl, a friend of Bauer, produced the play true to life and well-rounded, even though he sometimes went into too much detail. The main performers, Peter Parek, Wolfgang Krassnitzer and Christine Prober - the latter somewhat embarrassed, having to naked at one point in front of the audience - always stuck to the letter of their parts.

The Viennese dialect prescribed by the author was however exaggerated and it was often difficult for an audience from the north of the country - as this audience was - to understand the text.

Manfred Noky was responsible for the decor which was true to its milieu. The inadequate technique of the Hanovertheatre did not stand up to the demands made on it. And the long intervals needed to change the scenery hold up the flow of the play.

(Lübecker Nachrichten, 22 October 1969)

EDUCATION

Teaching research is only in its initial stages

DIE WELT

At their conference in Bremen the Education Ministers of the Federal Republic should concentrate upon in the

The list stretches from learning alms and syllabuses at schools and universities to the development of objective methods for judging the performances of scholars and students. It also covers correspondence courses and the relationship between technical universities and other forms of higher education.

The Education Ministers' programme of priorities corrects the optimism of the pre-election period when programmes, models and laws were developed in a trice, resulting in the impression that educational reform could quickly be completed within the near future. The education ministers have made it clear that a thorough reform and educational planning is not possible unless fundamental scientific work is done first.

Educational research - which should now treat the topics mentioned by the Education Ministers — is still in its initial stages in the Federal Republic, not because researchers have no desire, at all to explore the subject but because politicians recognised too late the urgency of

Educational research should give polit-

A LUCKY CATCH...

Please send me your folders on Germany.

Deutsche Zentrale für Fremdenverkehr (DZF), Frankfurt a. M.

ADDRESS

That's what it will be, your 1969 holiday in the Federal Republic of Germany!

Warm hospitality, many tourist attractions, a great wealth of historic monuments and art treasures, charming folklore events, this is what an exciting programme offers you for this year's stay in Germany. Send this coupon today for the latest information and free brochures full of practical advice on carefree travel in . . .

GERMANY

YOUR COUNTRY FOR THE PERFECT HOLIDAY

Apply for folders with information on Germany by mailing the coupon to:

Deutsche Zentrale für Fremdenverkehr (DZF), Frankfurt a. M., Beethovenstraße 69.

this distressing situation and suggest possible ways of solving it. But it has only just begun to sift through the problems

There are few institutes in this country dealing with educational research. There is the Educational Research Institute in Berlin, the National Institute for International Educational Research in Frankfurt and work groups in Heidelberg and

But the capacity of this small number institutes is far from the size needed to solve the problems quickly and fundamentally. They can concentrate only on a few of the important points, empirical advances in the Federal Republic must proceed slowly and during the research projects assistants must be trained. Research into educational syllabuses is not, as has often been thought, just one task which, when finished, will last for all time with equal validity. In a quickly changing highly industrialised society syllabi must be continually put under the microscope and altered. The same is valid for the development of criteria for performance or the research into the educational needs of a quickly changing socie-

Until today initiatives in research into education in the Federal Republic has been left to a small number of men. There has been no central planning and coordination even though that is the only way that reform can be put energetically of the most urgent demands of the educational ministers be put into prac-Today education is still planned according to the "force of circumstance". Politicians often use this term when they see themselves forced to make a particul-

THE GERMAN TRIBUNE

Under these difficult conditions the work of the few institutes already existing deserves great recognition. But it will remain fragmentary as long as the Federal government and the Federal states do not take up these problems and deal with

The USA's comprehensive system of educational research could act as a model for the Federal Republic. In America

basic research is done in Research and Development Centers, interdepartmental

institutes whose research is usually limited to one particular field. These centres also results of the research by Regional Lab-oratories. In the Federal Republic only one body has carried out this function, the Education Centre in Berlin. Such centres should exist in every Federal state. Today the publication or non-publication of scientific works depends

The Federal Republic has no equivalent to the United States' third institute of educational research, the Education Research Information Center. These centres are distributed all over the country and research findings as well as reports of how recommendations turn out in practice can

The beginnings of a system of educa-tional research in the Federal Republic must be extended. A good point of departure is the university information system planned by the Volkswagen Foundation. It is planned to store in the new body data from all areas of educa-

In the near future the recommendations of the Education Council must be put into practice. The Council said that arge experimental institutes should be built and research into syllabus centralised at one institute. Only then could some tion in the Federal Republic.

Parents and teachers are then told the them more intensively.

develop reform models.

mainly on chance.

always be consulted.

The failure of educational policy of this type is characterised by the introduction of the numerus clausus, under which only a fixed number of students are allowed to study certain subjects at uni-ar decision because of the state of affairs.

Educational research must be promoted far more persistently than it has been up till now and there must a central organisation. Otherwise we may soon be faced by a funeral pyre in all branches of the educational system.

(DIE WELT, 15 October 1969)

Plans for university television in 1971

Bernhard Vogel, Education Minister in Rhineland-Palatinate, and Professor Karl Holzamer, director of this country's second television service, submitted sugity Television Association in Mainz on 8

They recommend the formation of a limited company in which the Federal government, the Federal states, universitles, broadcasting services and large foundations should participate.

Apart from this it was proposed to set up a university institute and also build up a tutorial system to have expert control.

Annual costs for a thousand students in each of the subjects of chemistry, biology, physics and mathematics are reckoned to be just about 25 million Marks.

The first broadcasts will be transmitted in 1971.

3 1 1 pm

(DIE WELT, 9 October 1969)

Assistant lecturers confer on tactics

At the fourth full assembly in Bonn of the Assistant Lecturers' Conference, 129 resenting about 30,000 members in in termediate positions in the academic structure, the main issue was how to divide the load of organisational work in future between active practice and the working out of models and ideas for university policy.

Exhaustive discussions on the subject resulted in a declaration by members the conference's old and new board that the development of ideas should not be given up. However the assistant lecturer did not want to be top of the class only as far as proposals went. Fundament work should be emphasised as should action to try to get their ideas adopted

An indication of this is the choice of the chairman. Tilman Westphalen, a keturer in English at Bochum, was voted in by 56 votes to 48. He is the successoria Peter Fischer-Appelt, a lecturer in the ogy at Bonn and the conference's chairman since its formation in March 1968, even though he wanted to give up his office at the full assembly this spring.

Tilman Westpahlen was then voted in as his successor but resigned the chairmanship while the conference was still in session. Peter Fischer-Appelt said that he was willing to take over again but be made it clear that he would not be available for the whole year.

Westphalen was the representative of a group who favoured as a means of attaining assistant lecturers' demands a limited refusal to carry out functions that were not their duty but that they were normal ly burdened with. The full assembly passed a resolution planning to adopt this sort of strategy against the numers clausus which the conference consider neither necessary nor permissible counter the shortage of study places. If attempts are made to introduce further limits to the admission of students to universities the assistant lecturers will refuse to cooperate.

Westphalen said that the number assistant lecturers ready for any risks had increased. This is connected with the growing up of a new generation of assis tant lecturers who had already clashed with university authorities while still str dents.

Westphalen conceded that only a small number of present assistant lectures would come into consideration for receiving the designation of "assisting profet sor" demanded by the conference for a new category of academic teacher.

This position would entitle its holder to time for teaching and research but it would not include auxiliary activities and helping out professors. The basic reason behind the demand for the establishment of this post is that the assistant lecturer today is involved in an insoluble condict between his own intentions as to his future career and his teaching duties connected with his duty to support his professor. The university suffers from this conflict in so far as it does not received flow of teachers who have experienced individual research.

Assistant lecturers should be replaced by graduates with special scholarships and their nuber must be increased to a much higher level. The scholarships should be used exclusively for the further education of their recipients.

Discussion is still continuing on the question as to whether a new category of scientific employee should be created to take over the auxiliary duties previous catried out by assistant lecturers. Discilsion of their duties is also still not at an

(Frankfurter Aligemeine Zeitung für Deutschland, 14 October 1969)

MEDICINE

No. 296 - 11 November 1969

Preventing deformity dicussed at Regensburg drug thalidomide causes deformity.

Medical men will argue about this for decades. At the 43rd Regensburg Medical Congress Gerhard Koch, a geneticist from Edangen did not allow himself to be provoked into making a comment on the tral at Alsdorf.

All he did was quote the results from he investigations of his colleague, Widukind Lenz. According to these embryo damage caused specifically by the intake of the intake of the intake and resulting in deformity occurred in the sensitive period of a pregnancy between the 35th and the 50th

Gerhard Koch said that it was not his duty to judge whether twenty or over nintly per cent of mothers who took thildomide at the critical period brought deformed children into the world. Past investigations had shown almost without shadow of doubt that thalidomide causes deformity.

The exact scientific proof is lacking till because there is no chance of making suitable comparative studies. Statistics, both pre-war and post-war, are not sufficent in either number or standard.

Causes of deformity in children vary and can never be clearly delineated. As will as malformations caused by heredtary factors are those caused by a combination of inherited features and ealerior factors. Bacterial and virus infections during pregnancy may be at the not of the matter here, as may chemical ustances and certain drugs.

Another group consists of the ome diseases. The number or structure of the chromosomes, the bearers of inherited factors, deviate from the norm. Gromosomes can be seen under the microscope in certain human cellular mattial. It can therefore be seen satisactorily whether many deformities are

Hans-Dietrich Pache, a paediatrician from Munich, told the congress about mbryo damage caused by infectious

In Alsdorf lawyers will have to reach judgement on whether and, if so, how the portions of a minor epidemic in the Munich area in 1967. Listerii, the carriers of this disease, were the most common cause that year of the dangerous meningitis in newly born children at the Municipal Hospital in the Munich suburb of

Apart from congenital lucs and toxoplasmosis the biggest problem today are deformities caused by rubella infections in the mother. In 1964 so many pregnant women fell victim to an epidemic in the United States that the number of children with typical damage is reckoned to be between ten and twenty thousand, two to three times as high as those deformed during the thalidomide catastrophe be-

Typical damage to the embryo caused by rubella infections includes cataracts, malformation of the heart, deafness in the inner ear, tooth damage, a skull that is too small as well as general under-

More recent investigations show that there are also rarer diseases that can occur when the mother is taken ill outside of the sensitive period and during the middle stages of the pregnancy. One example is a chronic virus infection that does not start to cause damage until after the birth. It takes anything up to a year after the birth until the agents can be traced in the vaccinations. tissues and body liquids of the children

For every woman who has German measles or other rubella infections during a deformed child. If the mother is taken ill during the first month of pregnancy there is a thirty per cent chance of her child being born deformed. In the second month it sinks to 25 per cent and in the third month to nine.

tween 1959 and 1962.

development that can be seen at birth.

concerned.

Abortions for psychiatric reasons are allowed only in very few cases. Hans-Dietrich Pache stressed therefore that the only hope was a rubella vaccine already phenylketoneuria as well as cleavage of available in Belgium and the United lips and palate. In the one case serious

Improved X-ray techniques

At the Tokyo International radiologists conference Siemens put on display their latest development, a television X-ray. The equipment is especially designed so that doctors can obtain sharp contrasts in the picture appearing on the screen by eliminating extraneous organs or bones.

States. It will probably be ready here next year. Some people advocate that all girls of fourteen and fifteen should be vaccinated when they leave school or at some other convenient occasion. No serious side effects are known from rubella

Dr Pache quoted some shocking figures that underline the importance of prevention. Ninety per cent of all children with brain damage, 61 per cent of deaf children, 58 per cent of pupils at bund senoois, nrry per cent of senooi-children with organic diseases of the heart and twenty per cent of all spastics are the way they are because of illnesses during

A lot of suffering could be prevented if the complaints could be diagnosed and mental trouble is avoided by introducing a special diet as soon as possible, in the other the surgeon can prevent speech deficiencies and facial defects by operating at the right time.

Deformed children and their parents can be helped in many ways today. People must only take advantage of all the opportunities, beginning with genetic advice and ending with surgical and or-thopaedic care. Rehabilitation is still the part of human society as soon as possible

Apart from the purely personal help nothing can be done without money. Money must be available for research, diagnosis and therapeutic purposes. It was stressed many times in Regensburg that treatment of handicapped children could never be the best because of the overriding question of finance.

(Süddeutsche Zeitung, 22 October 1969)

At the beginning of October Saarbacken was the venue of the fifteenth congress of the Federal Republic's Crimindogy Association, attended by crimin-thins, judges and lawyers from count-ical over Europe and Asia.

Many topics were discussed but the issue was the question whether dines were committed under duress or as act of free will, whether they were a

A short while ago the public was must by discussion on a murderer's dromosome. The secret is said to be in tiny chromosomes determining the and inherited factors in humans. The emale chromosome is XX and the male Y. It is supposed that the deviant XYY ad XXY chromosomes lead to uregu lies of aggressive behaviour in males.

Proof for this has been lacking up till low. Experiments carried out on prisonshowed that only one in fifty had the MY combination. One in every five dousand newly born children has the XYY dromosome. In the Federal Rpublic here are about ten thousand males over the age of 21 who have this combination of chromosome.

If the theory of a special murderer's aromosome were correct many people in is country would have to be under lock and key because of capital crimes they and committed. Experts therefore condude that chromosome combinations can have some bearing on criminal behaviour

There is no such thing as a born murderer, say criminologists sexual crimes amongst youth as well. G. Bauer of Wuppertal criminal investigation department examined thirty juvenile murderers. During the puberty of 23 of the cases something had gone wrong with psychological development, it had been neither recognised nor treated and even- In the group of prisoners was negligible tually manifested itself in agression.

not protect these young people. Lack of sexual education plays no role in their sexual crimes. Bauer is of the opinion in a high turnover of jobs. that there are not enough rehabilitation ber is only 400 and according to the standards set by the United Nations there conception of girls. should be at least 1,600.

directing a group of lawyers, psychiat-rists, psychologists, sociologists and social living. On closer examination it was seen time and time again that many of the bad in Tübingen. They are looking for typical patterns of crime composed of individual but that the decisive factor is environ-ment. features. But the group is still cautious of speaking of the causes of a crime. At first Inherited factors and environment the criminologists at Tübingen did little seem to be the most common impulse for more than collect information and compared findings involving 200 prisoners and an equally large group of the general

An intermediate survey of this work was available at the congress in Saarbrücken. What was particularly noticeable family connections, a remarried mother An increase in sexual knowledge will (three times more common than in the Part of the group had had sexual homes and advisory educational centres in the Federal Republic. The total numeral earlier than members of the other group.

The prisoners generally tended more At present Professor H. Göppinger is to improvisation than to a fixed plan for workers in a special experimental project qualities of the criminals were actually produced by the same impulses, such as the urge for freedom, that cause more sterling qualities in many important per-

The experts in Saarbrücken were agreed that a judgement can be made today far more casily from the letter of the law and external factors than from the criminal responsibility of the offen-

Criminology has tried to clear up the mysteries surrounding criminal tendencies and wishes to contribute to the change from a moral, normative penal code to a social, humanitarian version. The beginnings of this can be found in Paragraph 65 of the penal code reform of 4 July 1969 which plans the introduction of social therapeutic centres.

At these centres offenders with serious disturbances in their personality, sexual offenders, offenders with a diminished responsibility of guilt and juvenile offenders will be treated less from the point of view of punishment as that of recognition of their own guilt. They will then be able to find their own personality and be rehabilitated into society.

Possible success is being regarded in a sceptical vein. But even if this course succeeds with five per cent it will have been worth it. But, as seemed to be the case in Saarbrücken, criminology does not yet know where the greater chances lie, in research into crime and the development of suitable treatment or in early recognition and prevention.

(Frankfurter Rundschau, 14 October 1969)

LABOUR RELATIONS

Unions' congress in a dilemma

Heinz Oskar Vetter, the head of this country's Trades' Union Congress, gave as a wedding present to the new coalition between Social and Free Democrats his word that the trades unions would give the new government a real chance and treat it with goodwill. Undoubtedly the new government will need this good will.

The success or lack of success of the new administration is dependent not least on the unions' attitude to wages policy. But there is also no doubt that on this point the unions too are in a precarious situation which will not make it easy for them to spread goodwill.

It is the unions' function to ensure that a fair part of the economic yield goes into the pocket of the worker. In the last three years their efforts in the field of wages policy have met with little fortune. The result of this was that the workers turned against them in a series of wildcat strikes that were directed against not only the employers but also the basis of the existence of the trades unions themselves.

Fewer miners

Nobody can therefore be surprised

The total number of people employed in coal mines in this country decreased in September to 138,600, says a report from the Poderal Labour Institute in Nuren-

Most pits were able to dispose of their complete output, reducing still further stockpiles. In September stockpiles of coal totalled 5.75 million tons and coke 69,500 tons.

that the unions have spent weeks considering how to iron out this problem. The Economic Policy Department of the TUC central administration in Düsseldorf has set out the results of these considerations in a kind of manifesto of aims, parts of which came to public attention some days ago and caused a mild sen-

The starting point for the unions' list of aims is the postulate that it is not only necessary but also possible to raise employces' incomes in the next four years to considerably over the rate of increase of the real and nominal social product. Capital income would be corresponding curbed. It would have to content itself with one half of the increase planned for workers and other employees.

The trades unions were little edified proposais became known. They attach importance to the statement that it is no more than an be made on the labour market. internal basis for labour policy that has not yet lead to any firm decisions. This is son and weather there is be no strong then some consolation. We must have sympathy for the trades unions and their their proposals are untenable.

What is the situation and what can the unions do in the interests of the workers? The economic balance is upset. Trade is hurtling towards the neuralgic also planned for advice on careers. point that will soon change it into a period of depression if nothing is done to ment will have 100 million Marks at its carefully apply the brake on trade but not to the extent that it skids into the

This is a difficult manoeuvre and can only succeed if all brakes are applied this includes wages policy. If the unions refuse to cooperate trade will have to be purged and its unpleasant side effects on full employment will be unavoidable as far as can be judged.

In other words the unions can act in two different ways with regard to wages policy. And the results of either course of action will not cause them much joy.

The first possibility is that they decide to support the government's programme of stabilisation. In the present trade situation there is little hope that the price spiral can be halted overnight and every-thing restored to normal. This means that their demands for the restoration of social symmetry will have no be post-poned until 1971 at the earliest,

The other course is that they insist on an immediate restoration of social symmetry and will brook no postponement. They then risk a collapse in trade similar to the crisis in 1966 and 1967. A crisis of this type would not only cause the unions difficulty but would also force a change of government in Bonn. Even the Brandt administration would probably be unable to survive an economic depression that could be felt by the man on the street.

The unions are left with no other (Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung alternative than to decide on the lesser of für Deutschland, 24 October 1969) two evils. And there can be no doubt that appermost in the minds of the workers is the assurance that they will continue to be employed. Only then comes the desire for price stability and wage increases.

> At the moment the unions must not do anything that hampers the new government's efforts towards stabilisation and they must do everything that will contribute to a speedy success. Only a coordinated growth in the economy offers a reliable basis to change the present course and pursue an ambitious plan obviously sponsored by the unions, an alteration in the distribution of income tax in favour of employees. Wages policy alone is not sufficient. It must be connected with a policy favouring the accumulation of employees' wealth.

Economists have long been agreed that a wages policy is not a valid method in the redistibution of the social product. In a recent memorandum prepared by a group of experts lead by Professor Bom-bach of Basle for the European Economic Community Commission in Brussels the reader will find the following remarkable sentence, "Any attempt to improve the distribution of income in favour of the employees by means of a policy of wage expension without raising the amount saved from wages is doomed to failure it will lead to inflation."

The unions will not be able to avoid changing their ideas on wages policy and tying them more closely with formation of wealth. The trades unions' own policy the formation of wealth is still await-

Horizons opened up by the new coalition government will then also be seen in areas that are at present hidden by mist. The smaller of the two coalition parties, the Free Democrats, have voted the unions' demands for an extension of worker participation and caused them considerable bother. But in the issue of the formation of wealth the Free Democrats are far more consolidated. The unions must be able to obtain something from a SPD/FDP government in this field,

Thus the dilemma facing the unions in wages policy has not yet cleared. But these longterm perspectives could make it somewhat easier for them to play once again a role of which they have grown heartily sick, the role of stabilisers in an unbalanced economy. There is no way of getting around this. The goodwill that the unions claim to have for the new government will place high demands on their understanding and ability to lead.

Wolfgang Krüger (DIE ZEIT, 24 October 1909)

Employers reject union demands

The Federal Republic Employers' Associations, (BDA), has sharply criticised the Trades Union Congress declaration on the tasks of the new government.

The trades unions' demands that they themselves should determine the limits of their power in fixing wages was an attack, the employers said, on the existing legal order. This was only a backdoor method of gaining an advantage over employer organisations in the factories.

The BDA described the unions' attitude in the question of wealth to be contradictory. On the one hand measures in this field are demanded, on the other side the chairman of the trades union congress has said that the unions would wait until making up their mind.

(Hannoversche Allgemeins, 23 October 1969)

Still plenty of jobs

The board of the Federal Labour people moving into new areas and the Exchange Institute at Nuremberg believes that excessive demands will continue to

Apart from variations caused by seaincrease expected in the unemployment figures, the chairman of the board of the worries concerning wages policy - but Federal Institute, Herr Herbst, said at a press conference in Nuremberg.

The Federal Institute has decided to stop it. Past experience has shown this. It is the task of economic policy to prevent million Marks to build houses for those same amount for the construction of homes for foreign workers. The Federal Railways are also financed to the tune of 30 million Marks for their services to Berlin. Only a short while ago the Labour Exchanges Institute gave the Federal Posts 40 million Marks.

The budget of the Federal Institute for 1969 shows a surplus of more than 50 million Marks. In spite of the considerdo more to attract factories into underdeveloped areas. Additional measures are the new Labour Promotion Law the board reckons on a surplus of 150 million Marks in 1970. Income will total 3,150 million Marks and expenditure about 3,000 million.

(Hannoversche Aligemoine, 18 October 1969)

Workers demand more influence

As trades union leader, Heinz O. Vetter, says this country's Trade Un Congress supports the new Fedge government wholeheartedly.

At a press conference Vetter street that he would expect Willy Brandi government to progress towards a comtutional welfare state after the lack it decisive progress in social welfare politi during the time of the Grand Coalition, Christian and Social Democrats.

According to Vetter a surprising small number of people with no adequa democratis legitimacy control the tops omy. The unions can no longer acquisic In this one-sided power structum En ployees must be granted an adequate sahre of the influence in the economy

A declaration to the new Feder government, published by trades unit headquarters in Bonn, demands an exten sion of democratic worker participate in all large concerns, a strengthening the rights of participation of factory personnel councils at places of work firmer establishment in concerns of the unions' rights of activity and represent ation and participation of workers in the whole economy.

According to the unions the basic tak of wages policy in the next four year must be to remove the inequality in the development of incomes that came to pass during the trade boom against the interests of the workers.

Vetter regretted that the Minister of Economic Affairs, Professor Karl Schiller, had suggested in this context that it was necessary for the unions wage expectations to be subdued somewhat. The chairman says that the Minister should have spoken about this with his socia partners before and discussed concerted

The economics expert on the board of the Trades Union Congress, Georg New mann, a member of the Bundestag, said that the size of the wage increases will dependent on the amount that the Mark was revalued. The percentages he had mentioned could well increase.

The trades unions have still not decide ed their stance on policy concerning it accumulation of wealth. The decision shall be made at the latest by the begin ning of December, announced Vetter. A the plans developed up till now had been unsatisfactory, he said. For that reason the congress had not been able to decide the congress had not been able to decide for one particular proposal. The impartant factor at first is that government resumed in the sphere of economic pol-

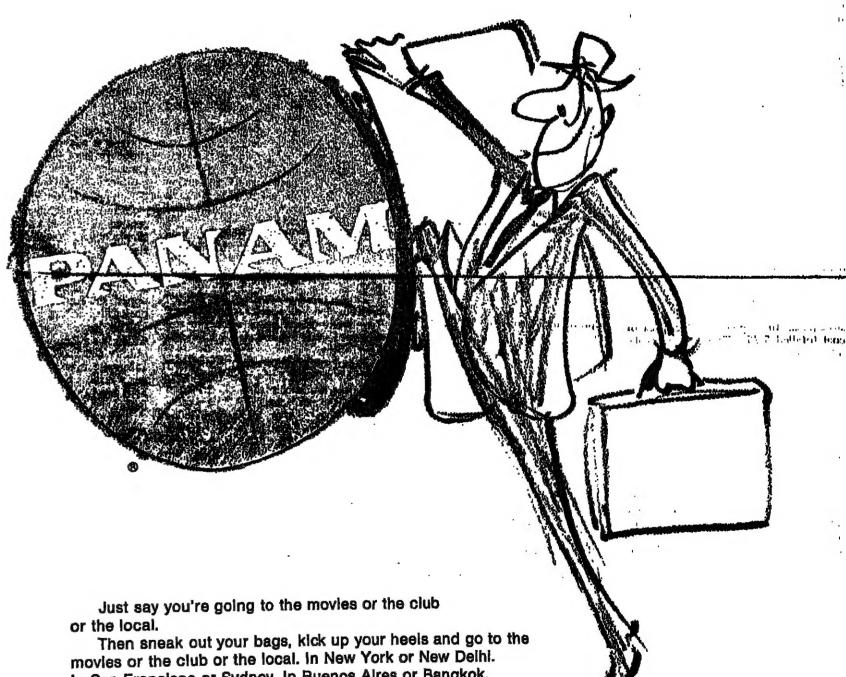

The price cuts caused by a change in the exchange rate must be passed on to the consumer in full, says the declaration Losses in farmers' incomes should compensated for with subsidies. Futher rent increases expected within the next twelve months should be opposed by increasing the number of council house

At the head of its welfare demand unions put the free choice of wheth stop work after a person is sixty. In the field of sickness insurance it is recom mended that the compulsory insurant limit for employees be removed. And it the view of the trades unions there should be family allowance for the first child # well to compenstate for the costs is volved in having a family.

If the Tariff Contract Law is amend the trades unions do not necessari expect an improvement in the position organised labour. The law will only forbid the courts intervening in the freedom tariff contract partners have when discut sing solutions.

(DIE WELT, 23 October 1969)

Go without saying

In San Francisco or Sydney. In Buenos Aires or Bangkok. Any place in the world.

The world's most experienced airline has all kinds of places. From the Northern Lights to the South Sea Islands. And we've got all kinds of budget fares and package tours to get you there.

We fly to 119 citles in 81 lands on all six continents. So get to a Pan Am Travel Agent fast. Then pull a fast one. On your boss or your neighbors or your mother-in-law. And go! Today. They'll get the idea. Tomorrow.

Pan Am makes the going great.

TRANSPORT

Hamburg's container transport exhibition

People in Hamburg can feel contented. The second exhibition of container and utility vehicles, held from 21 October, on a site half as large again as last year's has 155 exhibitors from thirteen countries.

This means that once again the Hanseatic city on the Elbe has been chosen asthe location for a fair for transport experts from all over the World.

The fact that one third of the exhibitors are from service industries confirms that Hamburg was the right choice for this second fair.

Shipping companies, hauliers, the harbours and last but not least the Federal railways are even more interested than one year ago at showing new methods of transport and haulage in a practical way.

Leading shipping companies in the West obviously rely on container traffic as the marine transport means of the present day. At the moment on wharves in the Federal Republic as well as in other countries container ships of the second generation are being built on domestic and foreign contracts.

Their capacity and speed excel the expectations of experts from as little as two or three years ago. It is already clear that in the foresecable future a substan-tital proportion of freight traffic will be carried on container ships. This not only applica to North American traffic which is already operated to a great extent by container ships, but also to east Asia and

That alone would be a good enough reason for holding a fail of this nature in a port such as Hamburg. Representatives of industry and public services have visited Hamburg to see demonstrations of the practical application of new methods of sea, air and rail transport, Furthermore in Hamburg's port recently much has been done for the development of container traffic, which can be put on show.

Hamburg's traditional rival as a port, Bremen, is not taking part in the container exhibition this time. It is said that as possible. in Bremen people in the shipping industry find the preponderance of exhibits from Hamburg at this fair disturbing. In other words, they obviously fear that work in progress on the Elbe, Hamburg's river, could proved an insuperable challenge to have already booked a stand in Munich.

This idea is not completely true since Bremen itself points out with pride that ports on the Weser are already capable of handling container ships en route to the United States every day. So it is obvious that shippers in these ports are aware that they already have a more favourable position than Hamburg.

THE GERMAN TRIBUNE

They will use this advantage. Not only the ocean terminal in Bremen being greatly expanded but also there was recently a goodwill tour of the USA by a delegation from Bremen led by the Mayor, Hans Koschnick.

Bremen will take part at an exhibition Munich in October 1970 entitled "Containerisation "70 - System and Method'.

Otmar Thienes, chairman of the board Hamburg's Industrial Transport System Company has suggested that there should be container exhibitions in alternate years in Hamburg and Munich.

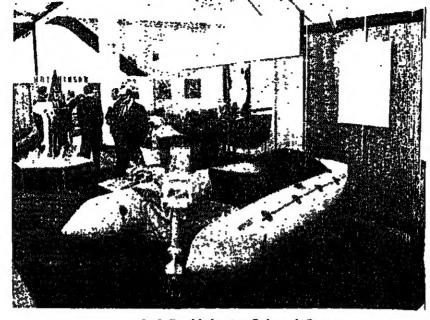

The reason Munich was suggested was that Thienes considered it an essential opposite pole to Hamburg. He pointed out the importance of Munich as a crossroads to the south and to the Eastern Bloc countries. In fact the Federal Republic as one of the greatest crossroads of Europe has an important role to play in the international stream of container traffic. This was backed up by the Comecon countries which obviously want to bring their container system with that

A link-up between Hamburg and Munich and an exchange system for the container exhibition would be desirable. The distance between them hampers technical development and greatly affects exhibitors but at the moment the circumstances prevent such a link-up. This is not only because the Federal Republic has difficulty in making arrangements for exhibitions of this kind. In this one particular case personnel difficulties in the company responsible for organising exhibitions in Munich play a significant

The head of Hamburg's organising company, Hans-Joachim Hoerenz, has stated that his almost exclusive task is to make container traffic look as attractive

He for one would welcome a link-up with Munich.

There remains only the question why Bremen has not exhibited in Hamburg. (DIE WELT, 21 October 1969)

An inflatable boat at Cologne's Spoga

(Photo: Bildstelle der Messe-und Ausstellungs-Ges.m.b.H. Kib)

Sport as a business makes millions in annual turnover

Never before have the world's best tennis players all been together in one European tournament.

They all came to Cologne for a prize of 50,000 Marks, a tasteful cup and a large expense account. Among the great names were Australians Rod Laver, Roy Emerson, Ken Rosewall and Tony Roche, the American Tony Riessen, the Spaniard Gimeno, Dutchman Tom Okker and Pierre Barthes from France.

It was only possible to book these stars for three days since the tournament was financed by "Spoga 69", the inter-national trade fair for sports equipment, camping needs and garden furniture.

This is the first time that this fair has been coupled with a major sporting event. Tennis enthusiasts had a treat. For this was not just an exhibition match but was hard fought,

Nobody was prepared to throw away the 10,000 Mark first prize. There were fireworks, world class tennis in the truest sense of the expression.

Rod Laver, four times Wimbledon champion, went out in the first round. Could the reason for this have been that shortly beforehand he had become a father? Or was this because a certain brand of racket will bear his name, but only from the beginning of 1970, as an advertisement in the Spoga exhibition hall showed. If only he had already had the ace sportsman as a trade mark for their

In one exhibition hall there is a monscentre". This power machine, a modern attended by a corpulent count.

title but his successes which make Werner you Moltke, one of the world's greatest exponents of the decathlon worth the fee paid him by the present day and of the past at work. Fritz Walter, Toni Turek and Wolfgang winning team of 1954 and internationals until 1962 are doing their share for the sales of footballs and football shoes.

Earning money was a far harder business for those amateurs who did programmes of exhibitions gymnastics on a trampoline. And the same applies to little Steppke who clambered around tirelessly on a child's gymnastic apparatus in order to advertise it for potential buyers. In the evening he must have flopped exhausted into bed.

European champion sprinter Helm Futterer is advertising spikes and training shoes. Each of them is trying in his own particular sphere to cut a slice of the multi-million Mark cake. Some are working for just a crumb of it.

Manufacturers must of course be inventive. Their inventions range from simple novelties such as a football on m clastic cord which means that without ball boys and a high fence budding strikers can practise cannon ball shots, to fashionable crazes such as skis with an upper surface of crocodile leather of ocelot fur.

The home sports-field is one which has a future. The idea is to combat obesity and horedom. Also on showis m automatic ping-pong partner which the lessly returns the ball over the net as long as It has been played skilfully the move

There is a home row-boat in which it is possible to sit with the wife or girl friend and swent off weight together. And on top of this all other kinds of apparatus to helo slimming.

WEIT DER ARBEIT

Not everything on show can strick speaking be called a sports article. Many objects are more for body training. Also on show are complete sets of golfing equipment from England with refined angling tackle from Canada and hockey sticks from Palatatan. sticks from Pakistan.

Sport of the future has already been on exhibition at Spoga. A development of the tartan overlay used on the long jump track at the Mexico Olympics was at

But above all it was possible to set !! future of football pitches: Astro-milities is a kind of artificial overlay rather like a lawn originating from the USA where it has already proved its worth in baseball stadiums.

But not all these futuristic developments come from the USA. The 'carpeting' on which the tennis professionals in a played in the Spoga Cup was woven in a factory in the Federal Republic. Professional international champion Hends Nüsslein praised this covering: "It is just like lawn tennis," he said. This was not false praise and control of the said. false praise, nor said just for commercia reasons.

(WELT DER ARBEIT, 24 October 16

SPORT

Scotland the brave were unlucky to lose

DIESWELT

Football is an illogical game. On 22 Reober in the Hamburg Volkspark stadum two teams of equal talent and shility faced each other, provided the crowd with fascinating entertainment and the better team lost.

This World Cup qualifying tie was a remarkable story of a team twice having o overcome a shock, recovering from the blows a little punch-drunk and then finally ending the bout tired but proud and more mportant - victorious.

constances must certainly not give the mucky loser the cold shoulder. The Federal Republic national eleven's

Any tema that wins in these cir-miner-manager Helmut Schön paid his expects to his opposite number on the South side, team manager Bobby

Said Schön: "Bobby has my sympthies. A draw would have been the

The Federal Republic won the tie 3-2 with goals from Fichtel, Müller and Libuda This victory has ensured their palce in laico whatever the outcome of Scotbal's remaining match.

After the intense excitement of the with when this country saw its match of the year (it was televised in its entirety) adjed down we can ask a few questions dat what was good and what was he sout our game in Hamburg.

Now that the aim of reaching Mexico been achieved, the Scots have reburned home and the crowds have disessed, the thrills of one of the most tense matches in recent years give way to a

The important thing is not so much to Mint the accusing finger at individual phyers as to weigh up the performance of the team as a whole. It would be futile to amp on points such as goalkeeper Maier's reponsibility for letting in two goals he eight have stopped.

The decisive question is how well the team blended into one unit, capable of taking on the best teams in the World. Despite all our efforts and hard work we were the more modest team and our strategy was easier to penetrate. The team, in fact did not always seem too sure, itself, of the tactics it was supposed to be employing.

How else can one explain the position of Fichtel, who according to Helmut Schön was meant to take on the Scottish number 11 Eddie Gray? Fichtel said: "It took me some time to realise what was expected of me since I was first of all intended to mark Cormack. In the end the job of stopping Cormack went to

Tactics played an important part as they always do in the modern football game. Whatever tactical talks the two managers had given, it was manifest that the Scots understood Bobby Brown's schemes better than the Federal Republic footballers understood what Helmut

It is difficult to say whether this was more the fault of the players or the

In future, however, it seems imperative that our men are not sent out to play with such a strict tactical set-up, leaving a vacuum on the left-wing.

And selectors must not flinch to drop "names" for the sake of tactics. The men must be found to fill the position and fit the tactics — not vice versa.

Hero worship pervades the game and one runs the risk of being branded "ig-norant" by saying that Beckenbauer's beautiful technical skills seemed too slow for the modern game.

It cannot be denied that our two sharpshots, Uwe Seeler and Gerd "Bomber" Müller only once really showed themselves to be a real team. This was in the 61st minute when Seeler nodded on for Miller to hit the Federal Republic into a 2-1 lead.

One big puzzle remains still: just what role did Overath have in the tactical

Now comes the praise. It must not be forgotten that we pulled ourselves out of the quagnire by the hair on two occas-ions. Johnstone's third minute goal threatened to knock the stuffing out of us, but we held firm until, just before half time the equaliser came.

Excitement after Libuda (left) boots in the winning (3-2) goal. Gerd Müller is on

Then just as the Federal Republic had taken the lead and looked like gaining control a simple headed goal by Gilzean put Scotland on level terms and it was anybody's match.

Praise indeed to Libuda who was always a promising forward and was rewarded with a chance for glory late in the game. A perfect through pass left him with a clear run for goal and only Herriot to beat. The Birmingham City keeper hesitated to come out making the winning shot all the easier for Libuda. Praise to Helmut Schön and his last

On 31 May 1970 the World Cup begins Mexico. This country's team will undergo a few changes before then. Several trial matches are planned. One against Spain has already been fixed for 11 February.

On 10 January the draw will be made for the pairings in the first round proper. Sadly one team will be missing - the brave Scots of Bobby Brown.

(DIE WELT, 24 October 1969)

Eighty nail-biting minutes passed for the over 70,000 spectators in Hamburg's

Volkspark Stadium before 27 year-old Reinhard Libuda from Gelsenkirchen rapped in the winning goal which takes the Federal Republic national rootball team to Mexico and sets Scotland waiting impatiently for 1974! was a great victory for this country. Libuda: "Before the game I felt like with worry.' Libuda must be glad he did not make

It was six years ago that Libuda first played for this country and in those six vears he has earned hismelf a reputation as our best outside-right.

But he has always been plagued with nervous trouble and has occasionally had to stay behind when the internationals went on tour.

"Twelve times I had been honoured with a place in the team and twelve times I let the side down." Despite doubters who called Libuda's selection a surprise and despite the fact that he is superstitious, international number thirteen was a success for the star from FC Schalke 04.

Libuda does not take all the credit for helping the 1966 losing finalists to Mexico and a chance to leap the final hurdle and lift the Jules Rimet trohpy. Modestly he says: "The fans helped a lot. The Hamburg crowd was marvellous. Our supporters gave me great support right from the kick off."

So, despite the fact that the Scots gained an early lead with a goal from Johnstone, which the Federal Republic could only equalise late in the first half, and despite Scotland's gallant fight-back from 1 - 2 down with an equaliser from Gilzean, this country's national eleven marches into Mexico - thanks to a talent named Libuda.

(Hamburger Abendblatt, 23 October 1969)

ORDER FORM I/We hereby subscribe to THE GERMAN TRIBUNE at the following rates (additional costs for airmail postage in brackets): DM 12.00 (3.90) U.S.$ 2.60 (1.00) £ 1/ 1/ 4 (7/--) Twelve months DM 20.00 (7.80) U.S.$ 5.00 (1.95) £ 1/16/-- (13/11) (Underline whatever applicable) The amount may also be paid in your country's currency Messrs / Mr / Mrs / Miss

Please return the completed order form to:

THE GERMAN TRIBUNE, REINECKE VERLAG, GMBH. 23 Schoene Aussicht, Hamburg 22, Federal Republic of Germany

Rod Laver racket. This is advertising, the way top-class sport is turned into big business. The annual turnover on sports equipment in the Federal Republic is 3,000 Million Marks. So it is easy to see just how much the large firms have to use the name of an trous machine called "The athletic power torture chamber for top sportsmen is the firm he was representing.

One of the joys is to see footballers of Fahrian who were in the World Cup

The end justified the means and the mentual success is sufficient to silence I might have been a different story if

e Scots, a great side if their fouls are forgotten, had held the national eleven of the Federal Republic to a draw or even taken them, which seemed likely at one

But these alternatives are forgotten low that Helmut Schön's boys have ought through to secure a place in Schon now has an incredible record of is since he took over the team from epp Herberger. In 1965: victory over in in Stockholm for the first time if years and a passage into the last titeen for the 1966 World Cup.

In 1966: the first victory against the viet Union, which had beaten this Contry twice under Herberger's manager-

1968: the first victory against Engand, avenging that World Cup Final select, plus the first victory over Brazil. Now has come this first ever victory Mr Scotland after three defeats and dire draws.

Luck? A masterpeice of strategy and Bychology? If anyone in Hamburg was noking for some cunning scheme he should have had the sense to stop looking as soon as Jimmy Johnstone cracked in a third minute goal for the Scots.

Schön's greatest success sinks the Scots

The gaping hole on the left flank could have been disastrous. Libuda showed just how much a born right-winger can troub-

It was not long before the cries of "Uwe, Uwe!" from Hamburg SV fans ceived more support from mid-field. turned to a prolonged chant of Beckenbauer falled because of poor apto a prolonged chant of "Li-bu-da!"

Libuda certainly can not be blamed for the way players grouped and bunched in the middle.
Uwe Seeler's fate (which he shares with all top class attackers) was to be constantly shadowed and marked by two by the fact that the Scottish defenders McNeill and McKinnon restricted themselves to man-to-man marking. This left a free man in the rightoutside-back position. Greig was almost always without a man on him and proved to be a constant source of danger.

Maier, who had shown himself to be

World class in St. Etienne was a big disappointment. Apart from being partly to blame for Scotland's two goals he was beaten on two other occasions and the side was saved by the crossbar. Likewise Beckenbauer who boosted his reputation in Sofia and Brazil. He failed to convince. He even played poorly on the occasions when he tried to find his team-mate Müller. Müller's goals have earned the national team a trip to Mexico. Seeler's header helped Müller to his goal in Hamburg. Both of these players could have lived Overath's passes in the first half? Only in the second 45 minutes did he do his job. Haller did not perform so well as in Glasgow. But could much more have been expected from our players in Hamburg? It was rather burdensome for the team to have to try to excel, when for so long defenders. But his task was made easier proach work. What happened to tactics had not been clearly outlined. It is perfectly clear who will be travelling to Mexico in search of the Jules Rimet trophy. The sad part is that one team had to lose and that that team was as talented as the Scottish outfit we saw at the Volkspark stadium.

(Hannoversche Presse, 24 October 1969)

National eleven certain for Mexico

Bamburger @ Abendblatt

The man who brought us a place in the final sixteen for the World Cup next year should be the one to tell the story. Said running as far away as possible. I was sick such a drastic decision, for ten minutes before the game ended he shot the Federal Republic into a 3-2 lead, which closed the scoring. The "worried" man was so delighted he turned cartwheels on Hamburg's sacred turfl